Floods Sweep River Towns; Cumberland Calls Militia

Potomac Rising in Main Street; Bridges Razed, Traffic Tied Up.

2 Mining Villages Are Abandoned

Troops 'Standing By' at Hagerstown; Streams Up in 2 States.

Flood waters menaced Cumberland, Md., and towns within 50 miles last night, driving residents from their homes in two places, washing away bridges and paralyzing traffic in some areas.

The National Guard was called out at Cumberland as Wills Creek, flowing through the center of that industrial town of 40,000, went over its banks.

Water stood a foot deep in low-lying streets, and backed up through sewers to a depth of several inches in the main business street of the town.

In Hagerstown, Md., the National Guard was ordered to "stand by."

Swollen by three days of steady rain, the Potomac River rose at the rate of 1 foot an hour throughout yesterday and last night registered 23 feet at Cumberland, 7 feet above flood stage. Rain continued to fall in the Cumberland Valley area last night and Weather Bureau officials predicted it would not stop until this afternoon.

Evacuate in Rowboats.

The Shenandoah River also was threatening a rampage, with flood waters of both streams expected to reach a crest early today.

As the rising water lapped at front doors in the Cumberland business district, merchants prepared to protect their stock with sandbags and wooden barricades.

Families stranded along waterfront streets were taken from their homes in rowboats and trucks.

In the mining towns of Shallmar and Kitzmiller, above Cumberland, residents abandoned their homes and fled to the mountains. Schools were closed at Kitzmiller.

The management of the Potomac Light and Power Co. at Martinsburg W. Va., said they had closed their power plants on the Potomac because of the high water and all power during the emergency would be taken from the plant at Williamsport, Md. They said the water was rising half a foot an hour last night and plant operators said they expected a crest of about 29 feet today, some 15 feet below the record in 1936. Water in the lower floors of the river plants, forced closing, the management said.

What was happening in western Maryland was part of a widespread flood picture, brought into being by days of heavy rain. One life was lost on the West Coast and more than 200 families were driven from their homes in the East.

Virginia Towns Flooded.

Richmond reported the James River was rising, but no damage was anticipated. In the south central portion of Virginia, however, the swollen Smith River has caused heavy damage and driven 300 families from their homes in the industrial communities of Bassett, Fieldale and Koehler.

The Post's correspondent at Winchester, Va., reported the Shenandoah was "bank-full" and that traffic into the town had been halted on route 50 west of Romney, where the road was under 10 feet of water from the South Branch.

Officials at the Winchester Research Laboratory said this has been the wettest month since 1898. During one month in that year 10.40

French Quell Riots in Morocco, Blame Islam's Unrest on Italy

Virtual Martial Law Invoked; British Head in Palestine Quits.

By the United Press.

Casablanca, French Morocco, Oct. 28.—Virtual martial law was established throughout Morocco tonight after a fresh outbreak of native disorders in which authorities alleged that "a European totalitarian power" is inciting pan-Islamic agitation.

The charges made by the French authorities did not designate the "totalitarian" power, but there was no doubt that it referred to fascist Italy. Premier Mussolini, on his recent Libyan tour, proclaimed himself "The Protector of Islam."

Authorities compared the demonstrations against France and the Sultan Sidi Mohamed with disorders in Palestine, which they said also were "inspired" by a European power.

[In London, the resignation of Sir Arthur Wauchope, British high commissioner in Palestine for the past six years, was announced, the Associated Press reported. Ill health was given as the reason, but Sir Arthur had been under fire for what his enemies called "weak policy" in the face of terrorism in the Holy Land.—Editor's note.]

Franco to Block Coast Without 'Outside Help'

'Starvation Ring' to Cover 650 Miles; Loyalists Move Capital.

The European Situation.

Generalissimo Francisco Franco, declaring there are no Italians or Germans in his insurgent navy, prepared for a "starvation blockade" of the entire Spanish east coast with warships and airplanes.

Premier Mussolini of Italy demanded treaty revisions that would give back to Germany the African colonies stripped from her at the end of the World War.—Page 16.

Starvation Blockade.

By the United Press.

Gibraltar, Oct. 28.—Generalissimo Francisco Franco announced today, coincident with assurances to Great Britain and France that there are no Italians or Germans in his insurgent navy, that he will blockade the 650-mile Spanish east coast with warships and airplanes.

Vice Admiral Francesco Moreno, chief of the insurgent war fleet, arrived at Palma de Majorca, in the Spanish Balearic Islands, and organized the "starvation blockade."

The blockade was ordered almost at the same moment that the Spanish loyalists announced that their capital would be, moved Saturday from Valencia to Barcelona—supposedly to escape being isolated in Franco's imminent drive to the sea coast from the Aragon front.

Generalissimo Franco, in a communique announced at his Salamanca headquarters, denied vigorously that any German or Italian officers or sailors held important posts in his navy.

It was indicated that the entire

Flat 40-Hr. Bill With Fixed Pay Urged by Berry

By Robert C. Albright.

Labor dissatisfaction with the pending Black-Connery wages and hours bill crystallized yesterday in a substitute proposal by Senator George Berry, (Democrat), of Tennessee, freezing into law fixed maximum hour and minimum wage requirements.

The new Berry bill, to be offered simultaneously in the Senate and in the House as a complete substitute for the old measure, injected a new element of uncertainty in a badly tangled legislative situation.

The bill would provide a statutory maximum work week for the country as a whole of forty hours in all industries, and a minimum wage of either 30 or 35 cents an hour. No independent board or bureau would be appointed to administer the law, but enforcement would be under the Justice department through district attorneys in every state.

Board Criticised.

The pending Black-Connery bill, which has passed the Senate but has jammed in the House, gives a Federal board discretion to establish wage requirements as high as 40 cents an hour, and a work week as short as 40 hours, but under no hard and fast statutory rule. Labor and some business criticism had been directed at this discretionary "rule by board."

The Black-Connery measure is

Radicals Tolerable, 'Half-Baked' Youth Irk Mrs. Roosevelt

New York, Oct. 28 (AP).—Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt doesn't mind "young people being very radical," but she "hates to see them half-baked," she said today in addressing members of the Young Men's Board of Trade.

Mrs. Roosevelt was the first women ever to address the board.

"Don't let half-baked thinking sway your community," she urged.

Taxes Near Confiscation, Knudsen Says

By the Associated Press.

Boston, Oct. 28.—William S. Knudsen, president of the General Motors Corporation, tonight told 1,200 Massachusetts industrialists "taxation of capital is just reaching the point where it is but a few steps ahead of confiscation, and we all know what that means."

"I sincerely trust that ways and means will be found to arrest this class movement (taxation of capital) before it becomes so strong that nothing can stop it," Knudsen said in an address before the Associated Industries of Massachusetts.

Urges Class Peace.

One of the leading figures in the recent automobile strike, Knudsen expressed hope a gulf between capital and labor would not widen.

"American industry must go forward, fight or no fight," he asserted. "Let us hope we can go forward peacefully and in an orderly manner, without class cleavage entering into the question.

"Our standard of living has been obtained by narrowing the gulf between capital and labor. To widen it will unquestionably tend to lower the standard of living instead of raising it."

Defends Private Capital.

The General Motors head declared craft unionization was natural, "but to say that a toolmaker or first-class grinder should concern himself with the plight of his union brother who is pushing a truck is taking a pretty general view. This is one of the dangers of the industrial union as far as strikes are concerned."

"I think that labor's fair share in the proceeds of business should be determined by what the pay envelope buys, and that the relationship of costs to prices should be examined before a false money standard per day or per annum is proposed.

"You know we cannot grow corn by killing the farmer. Management has to keep the wheels of industry going. The profit motive cannot be destroyed without destroying private capital, which means destroying private industry."

Would Revise Labor Law.

Knudsen said the automobile strike "was ill-planned and would have been abortive or have caused bloody riots but for the fact the Government finally stepped in and practically ordered settlements on a temporary basis of recognition for members, and the collective bargaining clause was saved for the union."

"I do not want ever to be in a position of criticizing our Administration," he said, "but I do think that all this hue and cry about collective bargaining could have been considerably less expensive if some ground rules had been set up.

"I think that with the Wagner act in force, everything depends upon whether it will smooth out or lessen industrial stoppages. If it won't, it probably will fall of its own weight, or it will be necessary to strengthen it so that it will function in an orderly manner.

"To say that it is the Magna Charta of labor is all right, but it must prove its value in giving men uninterrupted work, with consequent better earnings, or it will be a Magna Charta no longer."

Japanese Open Heavy Attack Along Vital Soochow Creek; Tokyo Outlines Peace Terms

Invaders Demand Buffer to Russia

Insist on Occupying 5 North Provinces, Neutral Shanghai Zone.

By the Associated Press.

Paris, Oct. 28.—A high Japanese source disclosed to the Associated Press today what were said to be the minimum conditions on which Japan was willing to negotiate peace in China.

This informant suggested interested powers, particularly the United States, start conversations looking toward an armistice, which he indicated the Japanese would like before the intense winter cold.

Japan, he said, was disposed to accept friendly conversations on peace in China, and suggested the Nine-Power Conference on the Sino-Japanese war opening in Brussels November 3 might give interested nations a mandate to sound out the Japanese and Chinese governments on their minimum terms.

Would Occupy North.

The Japanese terms were said to be:

1. Temporary occupation by Japan of China's five northern provinces.

2. Creation of a neutral zone about Shanghai from which Chinese troops would be excluded and in which order would be maintained by an international police force of Japanese, American, British, French and Italian troops.

These terms, it was said, represented the views of Japanese diplomats in Europe, and presumably those of the Tokyo government, although the views of the practically all-powerful Japanese army leaders were not ascertained.

Barrier to Soviet.

The significant point of the Japanese attitude as understood here was that Japan intended to keep her armies on a line to the south of China's five northern provinces. The frankly-admitted object of this was to prevent Russia from sending troops to China through Mongolia.

The official Japanese view here is that it will be difficult to negotiate a Far Eastern peace from Brussels, and the beginnings of peace could be discussed only at Tokyo and Nanking.

As the American delegation entrained for Brussels, the Japanese authority broached the idea of peace negotiations being opened simultaneously at Tokyo and Nanking.

The suggestion envisioned talks among Joseph C. Grew, American ambassador, Sir Robert Leslie Craige, British ambassador, and Foreign Minister Koki Hirota in Tokyo, while the British and American envoys at Nanking sounded out the Chinese government.

U. S. Delegates in Brussels.

Brussels, Oct. 28 (U.P.).—Norman H. Davis and the entire United States delegation to the Far Eastern peace conference arrived in Brussels tonight from Paris. The American "roving ambassador" and his aides hurried away from Paris in order to avoid—on President Roosevelt's instructions—any meetings which might give rise to suspicions of advance commitments in connection with the conference.

Hull Leaves D. C. For First Vacation In Over One Year

The trip will be the grave-faced Secretary's first rest in more than a year, as the tense, and at times, danger-fraught international situation has occupied him almost constantly since midsummer of 1936 when the Spanish civil war first flared.

Relaxing yesterday at his daily press conference, the Secretary smilingly forecast a brief period of comparative quiet in international affairs, as he turned his duties over to Undersecretary of State Sumner Welles.

Lost Battalion Clings 36 Hours To Last Shanghai Stronghold

250 of 'Chiang's Own' Survive Attack on Warehouse by 40,000 Japanese; Refuse Aid, Determined to Die.

By the United Press.

Shanghai, (Friday) Oct. 29.—Japanese battered vainly today with field guns and aerial bombs in an effort to blast a "doomed battalion" of Chinese from a lone warehouse in the heart of Chapei, but after 36 hours of incessant attack the blue-and-white flag of the Chinese Republic still floated proudly overhead.

The shell-scarred building, standing like a lone survivor of a massacre amid the smoking ruins of China's greatest metropolis, is the last Chinese stronghold in Shanghai.

Most of the other troops have retreated southwestward to a fortified line outside the city.

A huge bright new Chinese flag flew proudly from the godown (warehouse), replacing the bullet-riddled emblem previously flown. The Chinese general Chamber of Commerce obtained the biggest flag in Shanghai last night and smuggled it into the godown, witnesses said. Nearby British soldiers reportedly shared their rations with the doomed men.

The grim little band, many of them veterans of the Shanghai war of 1932, have sworn to die to the last man rather than retreat, and today foreigners and Chinese alike watched anxiously from the border of the International Settlement as Japanese, intrenched in gutted buildings, blazed away at the warehouse.

Fires raged within a block of the warehouse, but the Japanese were forced to turn the blaze to protect

Disguised Police Seize Extortionist Duped by Woman

East St. Louis, Ill., Oct. 28 (AP).—A colored man in a white coat and wearing a porter's cap swept the sidewalk on a downtown corner today, while four men in laborer's clothing loitered nearby.

A youth, his right hand bandaged, approached, lighted a cigarette and nodded to Mrs. Albert L. Wegener, who had driven up in a taxicab. She handed him a package.

The "porter," Patrolman J. C. Mosley, the "laborers," four detectives, and the "taxicab driver," another detective, immediately placed the youth under arrest. He said he was Ray Askins, 17.

Police Commissioner Albert P. Laumann announced Askins admitted he was the author of a letter threatening Mrs. Wegener and her daughter, Dorothy, with "something terrible" if she did not appear at the downtown corner with a package containing $500 in $10 bills.

Mme. Chiang's Rib Is Broken In Crash on Inspection Drive

Chinese Air Corp Head Ill in Shanghai for Last Week.

Shanghai (Friday), Oct. 29 (U.P.).—Mme. Chiang Kai-shek, head of the Chinese Air Corps and wife of the Shanghai for a week, suffering from a fractured rib and internal shock Generalissimo, has been confined in as a result of an automobile accident on October 23, the National Military Council announced today.

Mme. Chiang was driving from Nanking to Shanghai for an inspection of the Chinese fronts with William Henry Donald, Australian adviser to the generalissimo, and a Chinese officer, when a tire on their automobile blew out. The car plunged from the highway into a muddy creek. Mme. Chiang was thrown 14 feet from the car into the creek and knocked unconscious. Donald, at first believing she was dead, carried her to a farmhouse.

Mme. Chiang then insisted on continuing to Shanghai and spent an hour watching military movements here.

Foreign Areas Periled, Troops Are Warned to Take Cover.

By the Associated Press.

Shanghai (Friday), Oct. 29.—Japanese forces today launched a fierce onslaught against the new Chinese defense lines on the outskirts of Shanghai.

The fighting brought renewed peril to Americans and other foreigners in the international city.

Victorious at Tazang and Chapei, Japanese army and marine units, heavily reinforced, struck all along the northern bank of Soochow Creek, the new front west of the International Settlement.

The new offensive evidently was designed to drive the Chinese back to strongly intrenched defense lines running through Hungjao, southwestern suburb which already was under heavy Japanese fire.

British Area Menaced.

The battle area was a strip some 5 miles wide, from Soochow Creek on the north to the Whangpoo River on the south. Some of this territory is inside the British defense lines. The western districts of the French concession and International Settlement were threatened by the approach of the conflict.

United States Marines, British infantry regiments and all units of the Shanghai volunteer corps, haggard from loss of sleep during the slaughter which has lasted all this week, remained constantly on duty.

The Japanese warned both the American and British commanders at midnight that their new offensive was beginning and asked that foreign troops remain behind their defense barricades.

Along the south bank of Soochow Creek Chinese forces which had retreated from Tazang and Chapei, key points of their old front north of Shanghai, were preparing for a determined stand in a maze of trenches crisscrossing the fertile truck-gardening area which supplies much of Shanghai's food.

Hungjao airdrome, about 3 miles southwest of Shanghai, was one of the principal Japanese objectives. It was there a Japanese naval officer and sailor were killed the night of August 9, a prelude to the Shanghai conflict.

Marines to Seek Revenge.

For this reason, the Japanese command assigned its capture to marine units, so that they could avenge their naval comrades.

In devastated Chapei an intrepid Chinese battalion continued its fight to the death against encircling Japanese forces, rejecting an

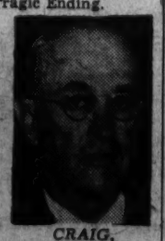
Gen. Craig and Woodring War With Verse; The General's Mustache Fares Much the Worse

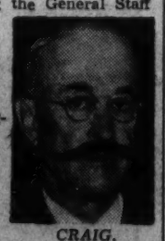
By Sidney Olson.

The Saga of the Mustache of General Malin Craig has everything—Love, Jealousy, a Battle, Poetry and a Tragic Ending.



CRAIG, Unadorned.

For today the upper lip of the General is streamlined, although his heart is probably broken. Gone is the lush growth that flourished south of his nose. Wasted —those hours of tender cultivation, of combing, plucking and gentle encouragement. The villain of the tragedy, they say at the War Department, is the bare-faced Secretary of War, Harry H. Woodring. Not long ago the Good General returned from a vacation trip, nervously fingering some grizzled new foliage where none had grown before. Subalterns smirked; the General Staff snickered behind discreet palms; and even the fear that discipline was being transgressed was unable to stop remarks that can only be described as "unfortunate." The General took to brooding about the whole thing, they say. In his office he stroked the budding young lip-beard affectionately, and determined that no one should despoil his dream. Now, suddenly and brutally, with no regard for the General's finer feelings, there appeared in the Army and Navy Journal an acrostic poem signed "H.H.W." The title was "Seeking Cover." Secretary Woodring was forcing the issue in verse.



CRAIG, Retouched.

WOODRING, Villain.

And the iron entered the General's soul when he perceived that the first letters of each line, reading down, spelled out "Malin Craig."

What dark thoughts, what travail, what anguish the General endured that night is not of record. No one will ever know what

Stocks Up $1-$6 Following New Margin Orders

Officials Wait for Long-Time Reaction, See Change as Minor.

Federal Reserve Board and Treasury officials watched the buoyant stock market without official comment yesterday, but informed persons said board members are under no illusions the new Reserve margin policy will work miracles.

Slash to 40 per cent of margin requirements on stock purchases and increase to 50 per cent of cash margins on short sales were received enthusiastically in Wall Street, where prices bobbed up one to six points, lagged, then resumed gains.

Washington officials made clear they are not primarily interested in daily market fluctuations, but rather in long-time market behavior and long-term reaction of capital markets and business generally.

Actually the new margin policy, which takes effect Monday, was regarded by officials as a relatively minor and incidental readjustment of credit requirements to market conditions. Although its psychological effect may operate toward a more stabilized market trend and even a stimulus to business, the margin change was regarded as a comparatively elementary but necessary adjustment.

Minor though it may be as a factor in influencing the trend of the market and commerce generally, the Reserve Board move was viewed by financial authorities as "a step in the right direction and a step that may have psychological if not fundamental value if followed by a helpful Administration attitude."

The recent market slump, it was pointed out, was not caused by a single adverse factor, but by many, important among which, financial interests contend, have been regulative restrictions and an ever-increasing business tax burden to meet New Deal social reforms. Main complaint in recent weeks has centered on regulative activities of the Securities and Exchange Commission.

Reaction to Be Studied.

The unexpected recent increase in the current budget deficit, and fresh cuts in revenue estimates, had not improved the outlook for the President's 1938 budget-balancing pledges. Feeling was that success of the budget promises was so closely intertwined with a forward business movement, and resulting revenues, that the Administration would hesitate to erect business impediments.

Not only stock market activities, but capital markets and industrial reaction to the Federal Reserve Board's margin regulations, will be studied closely over the next few weeks by officials here. Meanwhile other Administration moves are predicted in some quarters in promotion of a long-time stabilizing trend. Hopes were expressed that new security issues will appear for registration, and capital markets open, stemming the recent lag.

Favorable Reports.

Encouraging developments yesterday included favorable reports from two departments in the field of farm income and foreign trade. The Agriculture Department estimated farm income for the year will reach $10,000,000,000, nearly a ten-year high, and an improvement over last year's $9,500,000,000. Commerce Department officials saw in increased September exports from the United States some promise of favorable foreign trade balances for the year.

Inquiries among Administration officials yesterday developed that the Federal Reserve Board's Wednesday night market action was veiled in such secrecy that high New Deal executives, possibly the President himself, did not know it was to be taken. Secretary of the Treasury Morgenthau said he had no inkling the step was contemplated until Chairman Marriner Eccles called him after the board meeting. Morgenthau, along with other Washington officials, declined comment on the probable effect of the move.

Working for Washington

Mrs. Worrell, Active Civic Head, Strong Ally of U. S. Workers

MRS. MARGARET HOPKINS WORRELL.

President of Columbia Heights Citizens, a Prolific Letter Writer, Deplores Conditions in Federal Service as 'Chaotic.'

By Christine Sadler.

Mrs. Margaret Hopkins Worrell, now serving her fifth term as president of the Columbia Heights Citizens' Association, probably writes more letters than any other private citizen in the District of Columbia. She never fails to let public officials know what she and the numerous organizations with which she is connected believe in regard to any controversial matter in the news.

Words of praise she considers just as important as phrases of blame. Most of her career, however, has revolved around reforms she thought were needed. In 1928, when she was with the probate division of the Office of Indian Affairs, she led several thousand Government workers in a parade to the Capitol—in an effort to get higher wages for them by having the Welch bill passed. Not long before that she had called on President Coolidge urging a half holiday for Government workers on Saturday.

She was working as president of the League of American Civil Service, a position she still holds. She is no longer an active Government worker, having been retired as an "economy" measure, but she continues active in her interest for Government workers.

She believes the Government has one of the most discontented personnels to be found anywhere. The influx of young and inexperienced employes "at salaries higher than the older ones" she considers the main contribution to this. "Conditions in the Government are chaotic," she declares.

Most of all, she thinks, the workers need an independent board of appeals to whom they can take their complaints. She will keep working for that until she gets it—or Congress makes her know the reason why.

The Columbia Heights Citizens' Association is one of the oldest in the District and has approximately 500 members on its rolls. Due, no doubt, to the influence of Mrs. Worrell, it is interested in all affairs that are of civic value to the people—whether they be local or national.

It is on record as favoring a constitutional amendment which would give the District "full State rights, both nationally and locally." It also favors work of the new District of Columbia Suffrage Association, because "the more people who are interested the bettetr chance we stand to get what we need."

Personally, Mrs. Worrell would like to see the Public Utilities Commission of the District abolished. "It is more for the utilities than for the public and I believe we would get along better without it," she declares.

The association has asked for through street cars down Fourteenth street to Union Station, and holds the one-man car to be both unsafe and a bother.

Many prominent District leaders have been associated with the Columbia Heights Association. The group a few years ago won a prize of $100 for the largest number of constructive resolutions sent into the Federation of Citizens Associations during one season.

Mrs. Worrell is proud of the statement made in 1935 by William A. Roberts, then the People's Counsel in the District, that "the Columbia Heights Citizens' Association has stood just a little bit ahead of all other citizens associations in the city."

Mrs. Worrell came to Washington in 1900, from Ohio. Her first Government work was with the Census Bureau. When the Probate Court was established in 1912, she went to work in it and at the time of her retirement 21 years later held the position of associate attorney. She has two married children and four grandchildren, one of whom graduated from college last year.

She lives at Clifton Terrace and, in addition to her citizenship and legislative work, devotes much time to the ladies of the G. A. R. She has just finished a year as patriotic instructor for the organization and is now chairman of its legislative committee.

On Monday—H. E. Simensen, president of the Anacostia Citizens Association will be next in the "Working for Washington" series.

Sen. Truman Irked By Charge of Libel

Senator Truman (Democrat), Missouri, angered by charges that he had libelled a committee witness, abruptly adjourned a hearing of the Senate Railway Finance Committee yesterday with the assertion that he could not give the witness an "unprejudiced hearing."

He had just heard himself accused of "innuendo, misrepresentation, distortion, libel and omission of material fact." The accusation was made by William Wyer, treasurer of the Missouri Pacific Railroad Co. Wyer's bookkeeping methods had been attacked by Truman Wednesday.

Dewey's Arrest Threatened on Libel Charges

Special Dispatch to The Post.

New York, Oct. 28.—Leaders of Tammany Hall threatened tonight to cause the arrest of Thomas E. Dewey, famed prosecutor of racketeers, on a charge of criminal libel.

Three Tammany chieftains will meet tomorrow to lay final plans for the contemplated action. Expected to attend the conference are Assistant Attorney General Charles A. Schneider, Representative William I. Sirovich and Benjamin Spellman, an attorney. They will meet in the office of John W. Davis.

The Tammany plans grew out of a radio broadcast made Wednesday night by Dewey, now running for the New York County prosecutor's office. Dewey is alleged to have charged that Schneider was paid with racket money for representing a defendant in a murder case.

Schneider also declared that he will press charges against two New York afternoon papers, and that he will give funds from any damages to charity.

Dewey's charge that District Attorney William C. Dodge did not use all available evidence in prosecuting Morris Goldis for the murder of William Snyder brought a return tonight from Dodge. The District Attorney suggested that Dewey lay the facts he knew before Dodge's office, where, he said, "there are half a dozen expert homicide men."

In the meantime, the mayoral campaign hit a tumultuous high note tonight as partisans of Fiorello H. LaGuardia, the fusion incumbent, and Jeremiah T. Mahoney, his Democratic opponent, met in noisy rallies.

It appeared the LaGuardiasts intended going along hereafter at about the existing campaign speed, and that, contrarily, the Mahoney people hoped to come on with a burst of new fanfare until the election, November 2.

Mayor LaGuardia today asserted that he had lifted from the city the "mortgage placed on it by Tammany."

Said Mahoney:

"I will drive the Communists from pillar to post and none of those contemptible birds will be in public office . . . There will be no carpetbaggers in my administration. The train service out of New York on January 1 will do a marvelous business."

Meanwhile, the LaGuardia administration announced that its six deputy police commissioners would tour the city's thousands of polling places on election day and that the mayor himself would do likewise.

E. S. Smith Dies; D. C. Realty Man

Emmons Stockwell Smith, Washington real estate man, died of a heart ailment yesterday at his home, 2216 Massachusetts avenue northwest. He was 35 years old.

A native of Washington, Mr. Smith was a son of the late Emmons Stockwell Smith and Mrs. Isabel Quiggle Smith. He attended Friends School here and graduated from Princeton University in 1924.

Mr. Smith followed his father in the real estate business and was a member of the Metropolitan, Chevy Chase and Patuxent Golf Clubs.

Vandenberg Urges Wealth 'Creation'

Grand Rapid, Mich., Oct. 28 (AP).—Senator Arthur H. Vandenberg (Republican), Michigan, told a joint meeting of luncheon and community clubs here today that "if legitimate American business does not have a fair chance to profitably survive, none of us has a chance to survive."

In an address which criticized the New Deal's business policies, Senator Vandenberg asserted "it is a fine ideal to 'share the wealth,' but wealth has to be created before it can be shared."

A.F.L.-C.I.O. Peace Hope Ebbs As Parley Opens 8-Day Recess

Labor Circles Flatly Predict Failure of Efforts to Weld Union Groups Into One Vast Union; Lewis Group Denies Money Trouble.

Little expectation of a peace settlement between the American Federation of Labor and the Committee for Industrial Organization was apparent last night as a week-long recess in the conferences between rival negotiators began.

On the contrary, predictions of flat failure were aired in labor circles and it was observed that plans for settlement advanced from the two camps of "conciliators" were as far apart as the poles.

Few of the conferees on the rival committees remained here in the interim, though Philip Murray, head of the C. I. O.'s ten-man delegation, did not leave the Capital for his Pittsburgh headquarters until last night. He spent much of the day in conferences at headquarters of the C. I. O., the Lewis organization seeking to organize workers by industries, rather than by crafts, as is done in the A. F. of L.

C. I. O. Not to Issue Reply.

As the unionized millions of the Nation's workers waited for resumption of the conferences designed to weld the two vast setups into a single labor giant, it was said at C. I. O. headquarters it had been decided not to reply in the recess to the Wednesday night statement from the American Federation of Labor committee. The statement, issued by George M. Harrison, head of the A. F. L. group, had declared that unless a more helpful attitude was taken by the C. I. O. there could be little hope of progress in the reunion move. C. I. O. circles said the decision was reached in hope there could be a quieting of hostility created by the two-day exchange of statements in which two committees rejected each other's proposals for settlement terms. A. F. of L. headquarters, meanwhile, rested on the parting shot fired in the Wednesday night statement, reiterating its insistence that the C. I. O. must be dissolved as a condition of peace.

Harrison himself went to New York yesterday, whither had gone earlier some of the C. I. O. negotiators intent, they said, on "electing LaGuardia mayor again."

Growing talk of reported financial embarrassment in the C. I. O., meanwhile, was branded a "whispering campaign without foundation" by Lewis forces.

Reports have spread recently that the C. I. O. headquarters were feeling the pinch of insufficient funds with which to carry on its widespread organizing drives. Disinclination of members of the United Mine Workers, Lewis' own union, the Amalgamated Clothing Workers, led by Sidney Hillman, and other groups to put up more money from their coffers for the various C. I. O. campaigns, was said in the reports to have imperiled the industrial union program.

Operates Within Budget.

New workers enrolled in the C. I. O. drives are usually permitted membership without payment of dues until the unions have won wage and hour contracts. The A. F. of L. statement of Wednesday night declared analysis of the C. I. O. membership claims for its 32 national and international unions showed it had "little, if any dues-paying membership" outside the 12 C. I. O. unions which have split away from the A. F. L.

In reply, C. I. O. officials yesterday declared there was ample membership on a dues-paying basis to finance the organization, and pointed to the fact that it receives a 5-cent per capiat tax on all such membership, whereas the A. F. L. receives only 2 cents per capita.

They declared the unions originally forming the C. I. O. had not found it necessary to put up more money, because expenditures are geared to income.

$1,745,968 Spent.

In this connection, Murray declared on Wednesday that the C. I. O. Steel Union now has 500,000 members, with 80 per cent of them on a dues-paying basis. With regard to reports that the drive under auspices of Hillman to organize the 1,250,000 textile workers was not progressing favorably in the South, and little revenue was being received, the C. I. O. said that this month it had signed up 450,000 workers in the industry and had won union agreements with close to 500 companies employing more than 270,000 persons.

At the Atlantic City meeting of the C. I. O. this month, Lewis revealed that the organization had spent $1,745,968 in the past 16 months, including $966,000 disbursed in connection with the organizing drive and strike in steel. He said at that time that the question of a balanced budget did not bother his organization.

Air Contract Awarded.

The Navy Department announced yesterday the award of a $5,100 contract for interior and exterior alterations to the Administration Building, Naval Air Station, at Anacostia, to the F. H. Martell Co., Inc., 314 Insurance Building.

Newest Destroyer Sails.

Lloyd George Says Nazi Guns Rule Gibraltar

Strength of Britain's Position Debated in Commons.

By the Associated Press.

London, Oct. 28.—David Lloyd George, war-time prime minister, and retired Admiral Sir Roger Keyes warmly debated in the House of Commons tonight whether Italo-German fleets or the British navy now control the Straits of Gilbraltar.

Lloyd George asserted "German guns" now dominate the straits. The admiral testily answered "nothing can stop the British navy" and declared "neither Italy nor Germany" was in a position to close the important sea lane.

Sir Roger stated that "smoke screens" could mask any guns that threatened Gibraltar and all British shipping to pass.

The former prime minister snapped back: "that satisfies me. I ask the supporters of the government if that is their idea of our position in a great war—dependent on smoke screens."

British and French sea routes in the Mediterranean "practically are in the hands of Mussolini and Germany," Lloyd George charged.

The white-haired statesman declared that Premier Mussolini wanted "peace in Europe—until he and his fellow dictator (Hitler) are ready."

He told parliament that Mussolini "makes a great pretense of fighting the Reds, but above all he wants domination in the Mediterranean and North Africa and reconstruction of an empire.''

Lloyd George charged that Spanish nonintervention was a "boasted failure" and the "greatest, basest fraud" ever perpetrated on a weak people. He said that should dictatorship triumph over democracy in Europe, the triumph would be that of the nonintervention committee and Britain.

Flood Kills Dozens In Village in Syria

Damascus, Syria, Oct. 28 (AP).—A great flood rushed down from the hills northeast of Damascus today and swept through the town of Dmeir, where almost all the houses were washed away. Dozens of bodies were recovered by troops and police from Damascus. One hundred persons were missing. The flood followed a cloudburst. A sheet of water 9 feet deep rolled onto the town so quickly that the inhabitants had little time to flee to high ground.

Russia Sends 4 Planes To Hunt Polar Fliers

Moscow, Oct. 28 (AP).—Four large planes equipped for flying in the Polar night today took over the Arctic search for Sigismund Levaneffsky, missing transpolar flier, and his five companions. Ivan Chukhnovsky, experienced Soviet aviator, will be in charge of the new expedition, which will relieve that headed by Pilot Sheveleff, who has been searching since September 10.

Belgrade Stores Close In Licensing Protest

Belgrade, Yugoslavia, Oct. 28 (AP). The capital's commercial and domestic life was disrupted without warning when most of the shops and stores closed this morning in a protest strike. Merchants were demonstrating against the government's extension of licenses to Belgrade's two department stores. Even food shops closed. Merchants said they were ceasing to do business for three days.

Generation-Old Jewelry to Be Worn, Is Report

New York, Oct. 29.—"Public sentiment, rather than stylists, has dictated the jewelry modes of recent years," declared the October issue of the Jeweler's Circular Keystone, in describing the proceedings of the recent Jewelers convention, held in New York City. "There is a definite trend back to jewelry for beauty, since the wearer now has no fear of criticism for ostentatious display, as was true during the dark days of the depression," the report goes on. "The surprising factor, however, in the new trend toward wearing a greater amount of jewelry is that jewels of as far back as a generation ago are this year in distinct favor.

Gay 90's Return.

"The styles for fall and winter, which hark back to the golden days of the 90's, require authentic jewelry of the period, and a great number of pieces worn a quarter of a century or more ago are returning to favor.

Cameo Popular.

"Crosses, lockets, brooches, tubular and link bracelets are returning to great popularity. The cameo brooch is being worn by smart women everywhere. The locket is also back, partly so because of the universal craze for photography, candid and otherwise.

Collects Charms.

"One of the newest and perhaps the quaintest of styles is the charm bracelet. Many girls, especially those in high schools and colleges, begin their charm bracelets in a limited way, with perhaps only three or four charms dangling from a gold chain. Parents, school chums, and friends add to it bit by bit, until additional lengths of chain are needed to accommodate the tiny tokens. Many times the bracelet grows to such proportions as to be worn as a necklace."

Diamonds Steady.

Summarizing the proceedings of the convention, the jewelers' magazine reports that "the fine platinum diamond creation is not going to lose any of its popularity, but on the contrary will go to new heights as more and more people experience new found prosperity and good income."

Gold Watch Fob Comes to Light

New York, Oct. 29.—Indicating a definite trend to jewelry of a generation ago, a model in tails and top hat wore a gold watch fob at the jewelers' fashion show during the recent Jewelers convention in New York City.

Watch chains and waldemars are also returning to favor, the report of the convention shows, through the trend to more massive jewelry for men.

"Designers have seen new opportunities to style jewelry in so essentially masculine a manner as to preclude any return of the thin, airy style so much in vogue during the depression," summarized the report, "and manufacturers see better times ahead through the use of more material to make this jewelry."

Shareholders Ask for Action On Fidelity Sale

Report to District Court Early Next Week Is Predicted.

A telegram urging early presentation to the District Court of plans to sell the assets of the First Fidelity Building and Loan Association to the First Federal Savings and Loan Association was sent yesterday to Comptroller of the Currency J. F. T. O'Connor by Mrs. Mark C. Bullis, chairman of the share holders committee.

James H. Nolan, receiver for Fidelity, said yesterday preparation of a schedule of assets could not be completed until Saturday and that reorganization plans then could proceed. Federal Savings and Loan officials confirmed Nolan's prediction that a report will go before the court early next week.

Mrs. Bullis wired O'Connor:

"Early this month the plan to sell the assets of the Fidelity Building and Loan Association to the First Federal Savings and Loan Association was approved by your office.

"We, the shareholders, understood the Comptroller's office would present this plan to the court in about a week for final approval.

"As the shareholders are becoming more anxious daily to know when this will be presented to the court, I, in their belief, respectfully ask for this information."

2,000,000 Helped By Security Board

By the United Press.

Two million of the Nation's needy are receiving financial aid from the Social Security Board and the States co-operating in its program of public assistance for the needy aged and blind and dependent children.

The board yesterday, reporting on progress during the quarter ended September 30, announced also that 34,000,000 workers have been assigned Social Security numbers and are building up or are eligible to build up accounts from which they will receive monthly benefits when they reach the age of 65.

Under the needy aged plan, in which only Virginia does not participate, 1,469,700 old persons are receiving an average of $18.54 a month, half from the Federal Government and half from State and local funds. Since February, 1936, grants to the States have totaled $186,068,473.

Mrs. Mary Porter Wins 'Mum' Stakes

Mrs. Mary S. Porter, 3118 Eighteenth street northeast, last night won the Fulton Bradley horticultural medal sweepstakes prize at the annual chrysanthemum show of the Woodridge Garden Club.

There were 90 entries for the show, which was held in Sherwood Presbyterian Church Hall, Rhode Island avenue and Twenty-second street.

George S. Marshall, of Brentwood, Md., took second place in the sweepstakes, while G. U. Graf, 242 Peabody street northwest, was credited with the best large chrysanthemum in the exhibition.

Residents in the vicinity of Wills Creek started moving from their homes early yesterday when rising waters, due to recent heavy rains, caused the stream to overflow. Scene on Paca street made in the early afternoon. National Guard troops were ordered to patrol the city.

Troops Called In Cumberland As Floods Rage

inches of rain were recorded. Already this month 10.09 inches have been recorded. Dr. W. S. Hough predicted the annual precipitation record—50.47 inches in 1906—would be exceeded this year.

Rivers Rise at Johnstown.

The country's best-known flood city, Johnstown, Pa., looked on anxiously as the Conemaugh and Stonycreek Rivers, bulging from rain, climbed toward an expected crest of 12 feet, two below the danger mark.

Approximately 50 families evacuated their homes at Meyersdale, Pa., when Flaugherty Creek overflowed.

At Harpers Ferry, meeting point for the Potomac and the Shenandoah, both rivers showed rises of 9 feet. The peak is expected today.

At Great Cacapon, W. Va., a temporary bridge over Cacapon River was washed out, cutting off traffic from Berkeley Springs west. Highway travel between Martinsburg and Berkeley Springs on the west was interrupted because of water over the road, but was later resumed. Keyser, W. Va., was flooded in low-lying sections. Streams generally throughout the panhandle tributary of the rivers were over their banks. Crops were damaged.

Bridge Expected to Fall.

At Hancock, Md., the center span of the bridge across the Potomac was being pounded by debris and swirling water and was expected to go out during the night. Meanwhile policemen closed the span, cutting off traffic between Maryland and West Virginia at that point. The bridge was wrecked in the flood of 1936 and again last spring.

Flood experts at Hancock and Williamsport said they did not expect the overflow to be "half as bad" as in 1936.

At Williamsport the flood water was lapping the low-lying sections and town officials and businessmen were preparing to move to higher ground.

Rail Traffic Held Up.

Across the Potomac at Ridgely, W. Va., the Potomac's waters backed into half of the town, disrupting traffic and halting business.

Railroad traffic was held up by the Western Maryland on its line between Cumberland and Elkins.

In calling out the militia for Cumberland, Gov. Harry W. Nice had in mind past experiences during floods there. The town, built in a narrow valley in the western Maryland mountains, lies along the banks of the Potomac River and Wills Creek. Some sections are on a level with the normal height of the streams. Residential sections for the most part are well above high water—above even the 29-foot peak of the 1936 flood. In that flood, however, there was considerable distress and property damage.

At Martinsburg Meeting.

Mrs. Margaret Lewis and W. W. Jefferson, jr., of the Washington office of the American Red Cross, went to Cumberland yesterday to survey the situation and determine whether help would be needed. They were attending a Red Cross meeting at Martinsburg, W. Va., when ominous reports began coming in.

Others attending the meeting were dispatched to threatened areas. Mrs. Christine Bergen, of Martinsburg, went to the Hardy Hampshire Grant, Mineral County, W. Va.; Miss Janet Long, of Washington, stayed in the Berkeley-Morgan-Jefferson area, and Richard W. Thrush, assistant national director of first-aid and life-saving, also stayed in the Eastern Panhandle for emergency assistance.

4-Story Fall Kills Montvue Inmate; Inquiry Started

Early, a native of Maryland, had been an inmate of the home for about eight months. One brother and three sisters survive.

4,000 to Join Arlington Unit Of Red Cross

Home Accident Prevention Campaign Launched Through Schools.

Red Cross membership of 4,000 in Arlington County this year is indicated by incomplete returns, Mrs. J. H. Walton, roll call chairman, reported at a meeting of the chapter's executive committee at the home of the county chairman, George A. Collier, yesterday.

The Rev. Clark Main announced the launching of the home accident prevention campaign. School children will distribute examination schedules and assist in locating hazards which could cause accidents. A prize essay contest on home accident prevention will be conducted.

Collier said funds for first-aid equipment for four highway first-aid stations were voted by the chapter.

Four classes in home hygiene and care of the sick are planned, Mrs. Norma Davies, chairman of the chapter's home hygiene committee, announced. The first class has been started at the Arlington Woman's clubhouse, located on Columbia pike.

The production committee, of which Mrs. Charles M. Bardwell is chairman, anounced the completion of several Christmas bags by Hunter Bible Class of Arlington Methodist Church. Several sewing groups are engaged in preparing emergency packs which the chapter is providing for county physicians and nurses and in homes that cannot provide necessary equipment in cases of illness.

Announcement was made yesterday that the Arlington Kiwanis Club has postponed indefinitely the corrective clinic which was to open in the Baptist Church Sunday School Building, November 5.

The county board will meet tomorrow morning at the courthouse at 9 o'clock. Requests for rezoning of property will be considered.

Miss Kathryn Gravins, worthy grand matron of the Order of Eastern Star in Virginia, will pay an official visit to Mary Washington Chapter at its meeting tonight in Masonic Temple at Clarendon.

The Parent-Teacher Association of Robert E. Lee School will give a Halloween party at the school tonight at 8 o'clock. Mrs. Vernon Wilt is in charge of arrangements.

The Cherrydale Woman's Club will hold a bake sale in a storeroom at Lee highway and North Quincy street today.

Evangelistic services will be conducted at the Ballston Baptist Church Sunday morning at 11 o'clock and continuing through November 14 each evening excepting Saturday at 7:30 o'clock. The pastor, the Rev. Owen P. Lloyd, will be assisted by the Rev. and Mrs. Harold Fordham, of Philadelphia.

Civic Forum to Meet.

The Civic National Forum will hold a round-table discussion at the Whitelaw Hotel Sunday with "Superstitious" as the topic, it was announced yesterday by L. C. Farrar, the president. Martin L. Jackson, president of the United Progressive Association, will serve as chairman.

Road Situation To Change Little In Montgomery

County to Receive $93,000 From Gas Tax; Less Than Year Ago.

Montgomery County's road situation appears slated for little change this fiscal year following a conference yesterday between Montgomery County commissioners and Dr. Homer C. Tabler and other members of the State Roads Commission at Rockville.

The commissioners were informed the county will receive approximately $93,000 from the gasoline tax. Last year it received $129,449.

About $19,726 will be available for construction of new roads from the State bond issue and $11,629 from the Federal Government for feeder roads. In addition to this total of $124,366 the county has a balance of $54,000 from last year's unexpended funds.

The roads officials said that maintenance of bridges, decking and drain pipes will take about $32,500; surface repair and oiling about $35,000 and upkeep of the 478 miles of dirt road; about $50,000. The Glennbridge and another nearby highway that were washed out in the floods will cost $4,300 and $2,500, respectively. Incorporated towns of the county will be entitled to about $10,000 of the gas tax money for upkeep of their streets and roads.

This will leave a balance of about $44,000 for new construction, part of which will be used in completing several small projects under way. The macadamizing of the Forest Glen Road, one of the projects planned by the State Roads Commission, which the commissioners did not approve, would take $35,000 for the approximately 1 mile of construction.

Arrangements have been made to have the office of Lacy Shaw in the Dispensary building at Silver Spring open tonight from 6:30 to 10 o'clock for the benefit of those who wish to declare their intentions of becoming residents of the State.

In celebration of Book Week, pupils of the Takoma-Silver Spring Junior High School will hold their second annual book fair this morning at the school. About 150 pupils in costumes representing famous characters in classics will preside at booths in which books donated to the school this week will be on display. The pupils will also appear in short scenes which will conclude with a colorful ensemble.

Mrs. David N. Pettit, chairman of the annual roll call for the Silver Spring, Md., branch of the American Red Cross, yesterday announced that her workers have turned in $832.82 with a total of 715 members, exceeding last year's goal. In Takoma Park, Mrs. Frederick A. Johnston, chairman, announced that more than $600 has been collected in the drive.

Will Hays Spikes Montague's Hope To Make a Million

Hollywood, Oct. 28 (AP).—The office of Will Hays, movie censor, stood tonight between mysterious John Montague and $1,000,000, or thereabouts.

The powerful golfer, acquitted of a robbery charge in Elizabethtown, N. Y., was eliminated from Paramount Studio's production plans after the movie company's officials had consulted with the Hays office.

The crooner's brother, Everett, had a contract with Montague which, it was estimated, would bring golf's mystery man $1,000,000 in seven years. Emmanuel Cohen, Paramount producer, went to the Hays office with Crosby today.

"They prevailed upon Crosby and Cohen not to put Montague in the picture," it was announced.

Henry Dawson, Pioneer, Dies at Rockville Home

Veteran Cattle Man, 83, Established Ranch in South Dakota.

Henry A. Dawson, 83, who was a prominent cattle rancher and Indian trader in South Dakota in the last days of the Western frontier, died yesterday at his home in Rockville, Md.

Born in Rockville, September 2, 1854, Dawson heeded the slogan of his day "Go West, Young Man." He established a vast cattle ranch and trading post on the Pine Ridge reservation of the Sioux Indians in the 1880's and amassed a considerable fortune.

In 1911 he returned to his home town of Rockville, but continued to operate his cattle business until 1921. He was a former president of the Northwestern Stockmen's Association.

Dawson's death came after a serious illness of two weeks. He had been in declining health for some time, however.

He was the father of Walter W. Dawson, of Rockville, chairman of the Republican State Central Committee for Montgomery County.

Also surviving are his wife, Mrs. Fannie K. Dawson, a daughter, Miss Rose K. Dawson and two other sons, Lawrence A. and Henry A. Dawson, jr., all of Rockville.

Funeral services will be held tomorrow at 2:30 o'clock from his home. Burial will be in Union Cemetery, Rockville.

O'Conor Urges State Economy; Sasscer Hits Early Campaign

Aspirant's Attempt to 'Create Bandwagon' Held Failure.

T. B., Md., Oct. 28.—Senate President Lansdale G. Sasscer, candidate for the Democratic nomination for Governor, tonight compared the current Maryland campaign with the fabled tortoise-hare race.

Sasscer spoke at the annual banquet of the Young Democratic Club of southern Maryland. He said the 1938 campaign for the Democratic nomination began "a year earlier than usual," and added:

"The fable of the tortoise and the rabbit is most applicable to a political campaign, particularly when there are a lot of elements shooting at the rabbit. The rabbit has hard enough going in the usual three-month hunting season."

Sasscer contended the first announcement was made early "in an attempt to create a bandwagon. This would have been good politics had it worked, but the bandwagon failed."

Ousting of 'Unnecessary' Public Workers Asked by Candidate.

Cumberland, Md., Oct 28.—Elimination of "unnecessary" State officials and employes and establishment of State government on a "business-like basis" were urged today by Attorney General Herbert R. O'Conor, Democratic candidate for the 1938 nomination for Governor.

O'Conor delivered the second of two non-political speeches before the Cumberland Kiwanis Club. He spoke before the Cumberland Moose Lodge last night.

He told the Kiwanians "antiquated methods and threadbare practices" prevent the State's government from operating with the efficiency and co-ordination of most business enterprises.

"And for this failure to keep step in the march of progress the tax-paying public is paying the bill," the attorney general asserted.

Ex-Philippine Aide Sues for Divorce Here

Charging his wife with infidelity, P. William Reeves, formerly of the staff of Paul V. McNutt, high commissioner to the Philippines, filed suit for absolute divorce in District Court yesterday.

The suit alleged that the wife, Mrs. Marguerite Reeves, for whom Reeves had asked police to search since her disappearance October 9, had lived with the corespondent "at various other times and places prior to October 9 and after October 21."

Reeves, through Attorney Alvin L. Newmyer, stated he and his attractive wife were married in Rockville, Md., September 23, 1932, and resided together until May, 1936, when, the suit stated, Mrs. Reeves deserted him. Present whereabouts of Mrs. Reeves are unknown, according to the suit, and no address was given either for her or the corespondent.

Reeves was in Shanghai when recent hostilities began. He sailed aboard the President Hoover, which was bombed some miles out of Shanghai Harbor.

Reeves claimed his pet dog, Judy, probably saved his life. The day before the liner was bombed, he said on his return to the United States, Judy barked throughout the day.

"That was one of the reasons why I changed my cabin," Reeves asserted later, adding that his first cabin, No. 304, was blown to bits when the first bomb hit.

In the search for his wife, Reeves told police that he was in communication with her by telephone from Raleigh, N. C., and wired her money to come to Washington. When she arrived, she called him from Union Station, he said, but said she was feeling ill and thought it best not to see him for a day or so. She never appeared, he asserts.

Bootleg Coal Trade Prey of Racketeers

Harrisburg, Pa., Oct. 28 (AP).—A charge that "big time racketeers" have invaded Pennsylvania's huge bootleg coal mining industry was made today by Michael J. Hartneady, ex-digger who is State secretary of mines.

He angrily demanded that "the rackets be driven from the 'coal fields.'" Hartneady said a personal investigation disclosed that the "racketeers have set up their own coal plants." He asserted:

"The same money interests which bootlegged whiskey and beer in prohibition days and made millions, now virtually have taken over a big part" of the industry.

Batt, Realty Man Here, Rides in Car Show Relic

Repeats Thrill of First Trip in Automobile Made in 1912.

To white-bearded Jay Batt, 72, came an unofficial honor yesterday. Mr. Batt, who is a real estate dealer and lives at 1105 Maryland avenue northeast, helped put on a preview for the eighteenth annual Washington Automobile Show.

With a driver and two other companions, Mr. Batt went for a spin in a 1912 Studebaker touring car, which already had gone 84,000 miles. His excursion began when he paused to look wistfully at the 1912 job in the rear of Lee D. Butler's garage, which is adjacent to the salesroom on Connecticut avenue.

Invited for Ride.

"Looks like old times," said Mr. Batt. "Looks like the automobiles that were coming in when I took my first ride. Needs, maybe, a little paint, though."

Mr. Batt, who is a dignified gentleman of the old Virginia school, was told that the 1912 car was here to participate in the Cavalcade, which would open the show officially tomorrow. Just about 25 years ago he was lured to his first automobile ride, he said

"How about taking a spin in memory of your first ride in a car that was just about the nuts in those days?" he was asked, he chuckled and said: "Fine, fine."

So we all piled in the 1912 touring car, and the driver spun the crank. After a few gyrations, there were rumblings and sputterings. The driver jumped back in the front seat. "Hurrah, we are off," cried Mr. Batt as the fall wind made his cheeks apple pink.

The auto chugged down to the Lincoln Memorial, where little crowds gathered together with amateur photographers. All around it sleek, streamlined automobiles rolled noiselessly, on tires that were magic carpets.

Mr. Batt seized the wheel and looked intent. He waved his hat. Cameras clicked.

When it was time to start back, the 1912 automobile wouldn't start. The crank stirred only echoes.

The driver got out. Then he got under, just like the song. Up went the hood. The wires were O. K. The trouble, the driver said, was that the gasoline had shifted to the low side while the car had been parked.

So it was pushed. The old car was light. Back on level ground, the crank was spun and a lot of clog dancers began to practice beneath the hood.

"Yes, sir," observed Mr. Batt, "when I was young down in Virginia, horses were the thing. I'm still partial to horses. Let's go."

"We're out of gas, about," said the driver. He stopped at a station and the gas was poured under the front seat.

Perhaps the sight was enough to startle a horse even yesterday. One shied as the 1912 model, dream of motor owners back in the mists of time, rattled past.

"I had a nice ride," observed Mr. Batt, reaching for his cane.

"I've never driven one of these things.

"I never will, I guess."

Rep. Whelchel Hurt In Georgia Crash

Gainesville, Ga., Oct. 28 (AP).—Representative B. Frank Whelchel and A. F. Hardy, Gainesville editor and postmaster, were injured seriously tonight when their car plunged through the guard rails of a bridge over railroad tracks at Baldwin, Ga., and fell 40 feet to the tracks.

Passers-by removed the men from the wrecked car and pushed it from the tracks a few minutes before a train passed.

Patronage Woes

How patronage seekers made the Governor of Arizona weary of his job has been narrated by the watchful Associated Press: It seems that the Governor, R. C. Stanford, has announced that he will not seek re-election because patronage seekers have made it impossible for him to carry out his pledges and have deprived him, otherwise, of all normal home life.

* * * ½

Circulation Problem: The I. D. R. A. had wondered, at first, what success its publication, the I. D. R. A. News, would enjoy. The first issue, appearing on October 10, was loaded with the sedate little doodads of a sedate little organization. Then, on October 25, the News bloomed out with a blister against the Big Apple. Now writes in the editor: "Copies are at a premium . . . Nonmembers and other employes of Interior are now anxious to secure copies to read the article. But none are to be had, states Wesley R. Nelson, the secretary." All of which embraces certain elements that book publishers long have known.

Good-bys: Come Sunday, the Bureaus of Census and Patents will be missing familiar faces. Retirement then comes to Horace Cole, who had served Census for 37 years, eight months, and to Edith M. Clemson, who worked for 32 years 11 months in Patents.

Precaution

Note on worthy enterprise, coupled with a reminder: The Farm Credit Club has appointed a committee to collect toys for distribution among poor children at Christmas time. The members include Mrs. Louise M. Pressgrove, Arthur C. Bernard and T. L. Piper. Employes are asked to leave toys that may be mended in room 134, or with members of the contact committee, and to make contributions so that materials for renovation may be bought.

This is a noble undertaking but one that involves a difficulty. And here we take the liberty of speaking from personal experience. Not so many years ago we worked on a newspaper that had a "Good Fellows Club," similar, it seems, to what the FCA is about to do. Tear-jerking stories were written and soon the toys came in like a flood.

Of course, hind-sight is always easier than fore-sight. Nobody then figured that the toys should be put in some safe place. Instead, they were put in the city news room, placed in great piles in the floor. You are beginning to suspect what happened. Late of nights the reporters had toy automobiles spinning across the floor and banging against the walls; they blew the toy horns until they bust; they took the little toy dog and made it do everything but bark.

When Christmas came the children got the toys, all right, but the toys, a great many of them, at least, were seriously ajar. We are going into this reminiscence for the sake of the poor children at Christmas time. And commend it to the consideration of the committee on the storage of toys.

U. F. W. A. DRIVE: Edward Duerbeck, president of U. F. W. A., Local 50—a chip off the old A. F. G. E., Local 35, block—announces a bang-up drive for members, to open on November 1 and run through November 12. They will operate in Interior, generally, and concentrate on National Resources Committee and the PWA, having the assistance of the U. F. W. A. District Organizing Committee. The program includes:

On November 1 Dr. Robert C. Weaver, adviser on Negro affairs to the Secretary of the Interior, will speak in the "Know Your Department Series." The meeting will be at 4:40 p. m. in the auditorium. An organizer will be there. On November 9 a regular meeting of Local 50 will be featured by the presentation of the U. F. W. A. charter by National President Jacob Baker. On November 12 a rally will be held, culminating the membership drive. A prominent labor speaker will be on hand.

Notes

Workers in the financial analysis section of the finance and research division, FCA, have welcomed Charles S. Colby, of New York City, who came in on recent appointment . . . Schools Open Ticket Sale for Lunch Benefit 658 Seats Sold First Day for 'Magic Shows' at Belasco.

First-day reports from 18 schools yesterday showed 658 tickets sold for the series of magic shows which will be given at the Belasco Theater next week as part of the campaign to raise $67,000 to provide free lunches for the District's needy school children.

Seventy-six sales and orders for 32 additional tickets were reported from Ben Murch School, where Mrs. John Boyle, jr., was formerly president of the Home and School Association. Mrs. Boyle is chairman of the Citizens' Emergency Committee which is sponsoring the lunch drive.

"I think the first day's sales of tickets to the magic shows very gratifying. Taking the 18 schools as an indication of what is being done throughout the District, I predict full shows throughout the week—and possibly the demand for a second-week holdover," she said.

Partial reports from the "big charity ball' held at the Mayflower Hotel Tuesday night, however, Mrs. Boyle declared to be "severely disappointing."

"People apparently did not want to dance that the children might eat," she declared. While refusing to make an estimate of what the total ball returns would be, she said it is certain they will be "much, much below expectations."

G-Man Is Donor Of Shirley's Gun

By the Associated Press.

The person who recently sent Shirley Temple a machine gun was identified yesterday as J. Edgar Hoover, the Nation's No. 1 G-Man.

The weapon clatters and shoots sparks, but that is all, because it's a toy.

Hoover shipped the gun to the little Hollywood star, an aide explained, in fulfillment of a promise made at the film colony September 14, when Shirley made Hoover a member of the "Shirley Temple Police." Her acceptance letter, which she wrote herself, was addressed "To Chief Hoover from Chief Temple." It assured Hoover that Shirley already had "shot everybody on the lot."

Radicalism Is Blamed In Child Birth Deaths

Chicago, Oct. 28 (AP).—A charge that "radicalism" in medical care of child birth is keeping up the death rate of mothers in the United States was made to the American College of Surgeons today by its vice president, Dr. Frank W. Lynch, of San Francisco.

"The radical school," he said, "feels that nature is too crude to fit with the needs of modern life. They are doing what they can to alter it. Much surgery has followed in consequence."

'Boy' With Drinks For Labor Chiefs Told 'Wrong Suite'

Wearily-waiting news and camera men outside the room where C. I. O. and A. F. of L. delegates were arguing Wednesday for peace in the labor war set up groans when a waiter, with a tray full of bottles of liquor and ginger ale, stepped off an elevator and headed into the labor suite. To the newswriters, it meant the session would be still more protracted.

Lee Pressman, C. I. O. general counsel, who was chatting with reporters, blinked and followed the waiter into the suite. But no sooner was the door closed than it was opened again and out came the waiter, still bearing the refreshments. "Wrong suite," he mumbled.

"The C. I. O. refused to be liquidated," announced Len De Caux, of the John L. Lewis organization.

Original Bull Moosers Honor Memory of T. R.

Garden City, N. Y., Oct. 28 (AP).—Fifteen original Bull Moosers gathered at luncheon Thursday to commemorate the seventy-ninth anniversary of the birth of President Theodore Roosevelt, and heard his son, Col. Theodore Roosevelt, jr., aver that "the policies of the Bull Moose movement and those of the New Deal are as different as day and night."

To the little group of his neighbors who composed the board of directors of the Progressive Party of Nassau County when Theodore Roosevelt ran for President under that emblem in 1912, Col. Roosevelt said:

"My father stood for reform in democracy under the Constitution, while the New Deal would destroy democracy by concentrating the powers of reform in the hands of the President."

47-Min. Record Made in Flight From New York

Lockheed Airliner Sets Two-Way Mark Over 203-Mile Route.

After establishing speed records both ways on the Washington-New York run, a new Lockheed airliner was demonstrated yesterday at Washington Airport.

The first record was established Tuesday, when the airplane was flown over the 203-mile route from Washington to New York in 55 minutes. On the return flight the following day eight minutes were chopped off this figure.

With a cruising range of 2,000 miles, the twin-motored monoplane can readily be converted into a bomber for military use, President Croll Hunter, of Northwest Airlines, said.

The new aircraft, which has a shielded radio loop antenna, new type wing flaps and other important mechanical improvements, can carry 5,000 pounds of cargo and 650 gallons of gasoline, he continued.

One of 12 "Sky Zephyrs" to be placed in service on the northern transcontinental route, the plane demonstrated yesterday has a cruising speed of 220 miles per hour and a top speed of 260 miles per hour.

Army and Navy aviation experts, as well as officials of airlines, the Bureau of Air Commerce and the Division of Air-Mail Service, Post-office Department, inspected the new airliner on the ground and in flight.

'Sky Zephyr' Here After Record Flight

After making the trip from New York in 47 minutes yesterday the "Sky Zephyr," new transcontinental airliner, was inspected here by transport officials and Government aviation experts. Convertible into a bomber for military use, the plane will be placed in Far West service by Northwest Air.

Hungarian Chemist Given Nobel Prize

Stockholm, Oct. 28 (AP).—Dr. Albert Szent-Gyorgyi, 44-year-old professor of medical chemistry in Szeged University, Hungary, today was awarded the 1937 Nobel Prize in physiology and medicine.

The award was for discoveries of biological oxidation processes, especially regarding vitamin C and fumaric acid catalysis. He carried out much of his work at the Mayo Clinic in Rochester, Minn.

His main achievement was the determination of the chemical nature of vitamin C, which he first produced in pure chemical form from Cayenne pepper.

Kibitzers Are Grilled To Select Champion

Pittsburgh, Oct. 28 (AP).—The kibitzers, those fellows who peer over your shoulder and tell you—later—how that bridge hand should have been played, received a taste of their own medicine.

The University of Pittsburgh Faculty Club, claiming to number among their group "some of the best kibitzers in the country," set aside a period at the end of one evening's play to "cross-examine" kibitzers. Ballots were then cast, on the basis of analyses of the play by the "second guessers," to determine the kibitzing champion.

Cazenovia, N. Y., Oct. 28 (AP)—Several stores and offices in the main business section of Cazenovia were destroyed by fire early today. Firemen said the loss would approach $100,000.

2 Here May Go To See Suspect In Philadelphia

Man Held in Killing Partly Identified as 'Lone Bandit' of D. C.

Held for murder committed in the holdup of Wanamaker's department store in Philadelphia Monday, Russell Wilson has been tentatively identified by two Washington victims as "The Lone Bandit" who terrorized District liquor stores last spring and summer.

Partially recognizing Wilson from photographs, the two persons, whose names police would not reveal, will probably leave for Philadelphia today to make personal scrutiny of the suspect, Inspector Bernard W. Thompson said yesterday.

After robbing the cashier's department at Wanamaker's of $1,200, Wilson, alias Albert W. Gregg, was apprehended at the end of a wild chase during which he fatally shot C. Morgan Knight, 28-year-old investment broker, who attempted to stop the fleeing bandit.

Wanted for at least 22 armed robberies, "The Lone Bandit" has thus far successfully eluded intensive efforts of Washington police to trap him. A succession of liquor-store holdups, beginning in March, revealed a set method of banditry practised by the tall, thin man who was always self-possessed.

His procedure was to walk into a store, wait until most or all of the customers had departed, and then, drawing a nickel-plated revolver from a shoulder holster, force everyone into a back room. He then quickly looted the cash register. He has even waited on customers who entered the store while he was behind the counter.

Confining his activities chiefly to the Third Precinct, "The Lone Bandit" is believed to have robbed only one store twice. He took $350 on March 13 from the shop of Samuel Rosenberg, 1792 Columbia road, and three months later walked off with $184 from the same place.

Corn Loan Plan Reported Ready

By the Associated Press.

Usually well-informed persons reported last night that tentative plans for financing a new corn loan program have been drafted and will be submitted today to President Roosevelt.

The plans, these persons said, were worked out in conferences yesterday between Secretary Morgenthau, Chairman Jesse H. Jones of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, Daniel W. Bell, acting budget director, and Wayne C. Taylor, Assistant Treasury Secretary.

The tentative financing program, it was said, will be given Mr. Roosevelt when Morgenthau and Bell confer with him at Hyde Park, N. Y., today. It was emphasized that the President will have the final word.

Authorities indicated that the corn loans could be made without upsetting present budget estimates. Morgenthau recently said methods were being sought for making the loans "within the budget" for this fiscal year.

Pacific Group Sees Conflicts Over Air Lines

Institute Cites Japan as Only Nation Refusing Landing Rights.

By the Associated Press.

New York, Oct. 28.—Flying machines have given headaches to the chancelleries of world powers apart from any crisis that might develop over bombing incidents in China and Spain.

Air transportation, says the American Institute of Pacific Relations, "is now intimately associated with world politics."

International air routes exist only through reciprocal agreements between nations. Japan alone, among the powers, refuses to allow foreign air lines to land on its soil. In common with other nations, Japan warns foreign private planes to avoid its military areas.

Azores Incident Cited.

The Chinese government was slow to grant landing privileges to Pan-American Airways' "Flying Clipper" ships for fear that it would be used by the Japanese as a pretext for further expansion on Chinese soil.

P. A. A. chose Hongkong as its western terminus and until current hostilities destroyed schedules, the China National Aviation Corporation—in which the American Transport Co. owns a substantial interest—made the British Colony a regular port of call.

Air France Tranatlantique a few weeks ago was said to have been refused landing privileges in the Azores for its transatlantic survey flying boat. An Air France official subsequently denied refusal had been made.

Frictions Predicted.

"The Portuguese government just did not reply to our request," he explained.

"Refusal to grant landing rights reflects the policies of national governments," said the Institute of Pacific relations in a recent survey. "This refusal is not unrelated to other problems making for strained or amicable relations between states, as well as possible tactical questions of military science.

"It is even a moot question as to whether or not the frictions engendered by disputes over landing facilities will not in themselves become major subjects of controversy."

Chinese Seeking Funds for Church

The Washington Community Church officially opened a building fund drive Wednesday at a dinner held at the Cavalry Baptist Church.

The prospective site for the church is located at 1325 Sixteenth street northwest. Purchase price and remodeling of the building now on the site is estimated at $60,000.

Unable to attend the meeting, but sending messages, were Chinese Ambassador Chenting T. Wang and Secretary of Commerce Roper.

The greeting by Ambassador Wang to the group of Chinese Christians read, in part:

"Although I cannot be with you in body, I am with you in spirit; for I cannot too strongly express my belief that such a meeting place for Chinese Christians is greatly needed here."

Secretary Roper stated that the Community Church's appeal for "funds with which to purchase property for educational and religious work is worthy of success."

Housewife Fights Heavy Income Tax

By the Associated Press.

Mrs. Dorothy R. Stitely, 2704 Cortland place northwest, told the Board of Tax Appeals Wednesday that since she gave up her sales job to become a housewife she has had no taxable income "of any kind, sort or description whatsoever."

She is seeking a redetermination of a $12,201 deficiency in income taxes assessed from 1930 through 1936 against her and her husband, Reno E. Stitely, of the National Park Service, by the Bureau of Internal Revenue.

Contending she had no income on which such a deficiency could be based, Mrs. Stitely informed the board she had "nothing whatever" to do with Stitely's taxes for 1930, 1931 and 1932. She said she married March 18, 1933, resigned her position as sales assistant April 30, 1933, and had a total income of $243 for that year.

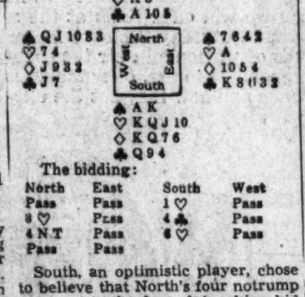
MRS. ELY CULBERTSON ON CONTRACT

Strip and End-Play.

Statistically minded Bridge players could get a lot of fun out of estimating how many points are thrown away yearly through the failure of fellow players to capitalize their opportunities. The statisticians might start out by entering the 1,730 points thrown away by the declarer in the following hand:

North, dealer.
North-South vulnerable.



The bidding:

North	East	South	West
Pass	Pass	1 ♡	Pass
3 ♡	Pass	4 ♣	Pass
4 N T	Pass	6 ♡	Pass
Pass	Pass

South, an optimistic player, chose to believe that North's four notrump response to the four club asking bid was predicated on second round club control and two outside Aces. This, of course would make a slam virtually a laydown. But South was not justified in jumping to this conclusion. There was another possible meaning to North's response, namely, that he had the club Ace and another Ace, which of course was actually true. Nevertheless, if declarer had capitalized the fact that the cards lay favorably for him, the contract would have been fulfilled.

West opened the spade Queen. Declarer won and led a heart. East won and had merely to exit in order to protect his club King for the eventual setting trick.

Declarer should have seen that the one hope for contract was to avoid a club loser. Obviously, one opponent had to have at least four diamonds, so there was no hope of discarding dummy's two clubs on the diamond suit. There was, however, a distinct opportunity for a strip-and-end-play.

Declarer should have cleared the spades and diamonds from his own hand and from dummy before leading a trump. With ten trumps in the combined heands, there was a distinct chance that the Ace of trumps was blank. If the defender with the trump Ace also held the club King, he would have to lead from the latter card to the combined tenace in the North-South hands. That, of course, is what would have happened. Dummy would discard one club on the third diamond, and the fourth diamond would be ruffed in dummy. If East over-ruffed he would have to lead from the club King; if he did not, a heart lead would force that lead. Surely this would have been a better plan that "giving up."

6 Peace Groups Assail Yarnell's Orders to Fire

Protest Power Given Navy in War; Wang Says Foe Seeks to Halt Progress.

The Administration's "24-hour policy" toward the Far Eastern situation "leaves control of peace and war issues to the Navy," six peace organizations supporting American neutrality charged yesterday. Their statement referred to the order of Admiral Harry E. Yarnell, commander of the United States Asiatic fleet, for Marines to fire on planes attacking the International Settlement at Shanghai.

It said the order "is clear proof that the Administration's 24-hour policy is leading toward war and directly opposed to the letter and spirit of the neutrality law designed to keep this country out of war."

The organizations are the National Council for the Prevention of War, Women's International League for Peace and Freedom, World Peaceways, Emergency Peace Campaign, Fellowship of Reconciliation and Committee on Militarism in Education.

The statement was issued some time after Dr. C. T. Wang, China's ambassador here, had declared at a National Press Club luncheon that "the Japanese are making war on us because they want to stop our progress."

The Chinese have made more progress in the last ten years than they did for centuries previously, he said, adding they are "ahead of the Japanese now in many respects."

"They are afraid we will finish them," he declared.

Asked why China continued to tolerate the "undeclared war," why she did not declare war herself, he replied:

"It is not the duty of a victim of a marauder to declare war on him, but to shoot him.

Boys Club Attendance Increases 34 Per Cent

Attendance at the Boys Club of Washington was 34 per cent greater last month than at the same period a year ago, according to a report released yesterday by Charles M. Fyfe, managing director.

Since most boys enroll in September for activities that they carry on throughout the school year, the heavy enrollment this fall means that the club will have to expand its program to care for an average daily attendance of about 250 boys.

Leo Stein Praises D. C. Art— But Where Is Grant Memorial?

Quick now, where is the Grant Memorial?

If Leo Stein's experiences in attempting to locate Washington's largest and finest equestrian group constitute a criterion, the majority of you will answer, "I don't know."

Leo Stein was in the Capital yesterday. Viewing paintings at the Phillips Memorial Gallery, eating waffles on Connecticut avenue, taking in an F street movie, dining with a Supreme Court justice. And chuckling over the time he had finding out where the Grant Memorial is.

Leo Stein needs no introduction to American artists. They know him as one of the most penetrating of critics. To non-artists perhaps the simplest way to identify him is as one of Gertrude Stein's two brothers. Leo make his home mostly in France, like sister Gertrude, though he has never given up his American citizenship.

Unlike Gertrude, Stein doesn't go in for double-talk. When he wants to say the murals in the new Post-office and Justice Buildings are excellent, indeed, he says it in so many words.

He said he thought Frank Mechau's mural showing a bevy of nude white ladies being scalped by Indians was a good composition.

"Whatever objections there have been to the subject matter are purely a matter of sentiment. As painting, I like it very much."

Because governmental patronage of the fine arts, which dates from the Public Works of Art project in 1933, is democratizing good painting and sculpture, Stein is enthusiastic over America's future. In fact, "things are stirring so much in this country" he is planning to return next year and lecture about them.

But that Grant Memorial. Stein is a friend of the late sculptor's son, who suggested that he have a look at the Schrady masterpiece when he came to Washington. The visitor asked one friend after another where the group was. No one knew. Not even some of the Capital's leading connoisseurs and critics.

He found out eventually, of course, and saw for himself that the monument is every bit as noble as its location is mysterious.

Well, where is it?

Japanese Open Heavy Drive on Soochow Creek

Warn Foreign Troops to Take Cover; Hungjao Airdrome Is Goal.

Anglo-American offer of asylum within the International Settlement.

Maj. Gen. A. P. D. Telfer-Smollett, commanding British troops at Shanghai, and Brig. Gen. John C. Beaumont, commanding two regiments of United States Marines, offered to help the apparently doomed battalion to gain sanctuary south of Soochow Creek if the Chinese would lay down their arms.

Col. Chin Yuan declined the offer. The American and British commanders had hoped thus to remove danger of stray bullets and shells flying into the International Settlement when the Japanese made their threatened attack to wipe the battalion out.

Creek Only 50 Yards Wide.

The Chinese, a remnant of Generalissimo Chiang Kai-chek's crack Eighty-eighth Division, which had held Chapei for 75 days before retiring Wednesday, were holding out in a building just across Soochow Creek from the Wenchow road sector held by the United States Marines.

Soochow Creek, separating the Marines' posts from the battalion's stronghold, is only about 50 yards wide, a winding, canal-like stream.

Gen. Telfer-Smollett himself was under fire yesterday when two Japanese tanks sprayed a bridge across Soochow Creek with machine-gun bullets. The general was standing with a group of Britons and American movie cameramen at the southern end of the bridge, when the tanks moved to positions at the north end and opened fire without warning.

Woman Near Briton Killed.

A Chinese woman near the British commander was killed. The general and those with him took cover in a nearby British blockhouse. Norman Alley, Joseph Rucker and Eric Mayell, who were photographing a group of 30 or 40 Chinese refugees fleeing across the bridge, said the tanks fired at least 300 rounds, the bullets spattering dangerously near the foreigners.

In North China the Japanese reported continued progress along the railway entering Shansi Province from Hopei Province and were said to be within 65 moiles of Taiyuanfu, Shansi capital.

In Peiping the Japanese cleared all traffic from principal streets for four hours for the passage of Col. Shitei, aide-de-camp and personal messenger for the Japanese emporer, who brought a message and gifts to Japanese troops. Chinese thought the Japanese were bringing Emperor Kang Teh of Canchukuo, former boy emporer of China, back to remount the dragon throne.

their own positions, and the threat to the warehouse was averted.

Bullets from Japanese machine guns sprayed the southern bank of Soochow Creek, within the foreign zone.

Chinese said there were about 500 in the building, but foreign reports indicated there were less than half that many—all members of "Chiang's Own," the crack troops of Generalissimo Chiang Kaishek.

40,000 in Attack.

At least 40,000 Japanese are attacking them.

They were within shouting distance of the foreign zone and frequently exchanged comments with men who dashed through the scanty protection of the building itself to confer with the leaders.

American and British military authorities and scores of foreigners appealed to the generalissimo to urge his men to accept refuge in the Settlement, surrendering their arms to foreign authorities. They refused to leave under these conditions.

Chinese women, with tears streaming down their cheeks, knelt behind barbed wire barricades at the edge of the foreign zone and prayed in wailing sing-song for the "suicide men" to retire.

Members of the doomed band stood near windows and waved at American marines, who cheered them from the tops of sandbag walls. Many foreigners brought food in the hope of sending it across the narrow "No Man's Land," but marine officers said this was impossible.

The Japanese hauled up a 3-inch gun shortly after dawn and began to batter at the walls, but the attack was ineffective. Observers believed the defenders of "Shanghai's Alamo" might hold out almost indefinitely.

Meanwhile every eye in the settlement was fixed on the blue flag, still fluttering high overhead, giving proof that the gallant band was still out there in the roaring hell of bullets, bombs and shrapnel.

Send Last Messages.

Last night they threw out bags of mail—last messages to their families, wives and sweethearts—which were picked up by British and American troops, who hold a narrow lane connecting the big "Godown" with the Soochow Creek rim of the International Settlement.

Col. John C. Beaumont, commander of American Marines stationed at the sandbag barricades within shouting distance of the "Godown," offered to permit the grim little band to retreat along the strip of ground connecting their building with the settlement.

Their answer came back in mocking words:

"Let the Japanese try to escort us to safety."

"We Came to Die."

The British commander, Brig. Gen. A. P. D. Telfer-Smollett, made a similar offer, and it was refused.

"We came here to die, and we are going to stay," the commander of the battalion, Col. Hsieh Chin-Yuan, told a member of the Shanghai municipal police, who crossed under shellfire to the door of the warehouse. The colonel was one of the heroes of the Nineteenth Route Army's immortal stand at Shanghai in 1932.

"We have decided not to join the retreat," the officer declared. "We are going to do as the Paoshan Battalion did."

Plea for U. S. Regulation Follows 'Elixir' Deaths

The recent epidemic of deaths said to be caused by an elixir of sulfanilamide yesterday caused the president of the National League of Women Voters to demand new Federal legislation regulating foods, drugs and cosmetics.

In a letter to league members, Marguerite M. Wells, head of the organization, declared that the recent incidents "point tragically to the need for Federal legislation ensuring a Governmental check on such products before they are distributed to a helpless public." Previous efforts at regulation, she said, have been unsuccessful because of opposition by "special interests."

Hospital Co-ordinator.

On more than one occasion during its administration of the municipal hospitals the Board of Public Welfare recommended the appointment of a general District superintendent. The suggestion, however, took no effect. Now that the Health Department has taken over the institutions, the same recommendation is heard. It is to be hoped that this time something will come of it.

Not that the hospitals lack proper supervision. All evidence indicates that they are admirably conducted. Indeed, they are even co-ordinated to an extent. An assistant health officer has responsibility to integrate the operation of all. But his interests and time are necessarily dedicated primarily to the medical aspects of their coordination. What seems to be needed is to combine under one authority the administration of Gallinger and the tuberculosis sanitoria, while also perfecting the business arrangements between the District government and the several local hospitals which receive public patients on contract.

The only obstacle seems to be the money required. The Budget Bureau has consistently refused to appropriate a general superintendent's salary. This may be false economy. The money to be saved by efficient administration of the city's hospital system should more than offset the extra few thousand dollars needed to obtain a competent co-ordinator.

Issues Behind The Farm Bill.

The House Agriculture Committee apparently divided its study of crop-control methods into five different sections because of the wide divergence of views among its members. The move might, therefore, be interpreted as an unfavorable portent for the farm bill. But it is more reasonable to regard it as an encouraging indication that Congressmen are thinking independently about one of the most important problems confronting the country.

Each sub-committee will consider a separate commodity. That appears to be sound procedure, if it does not divert the investigators from the more fundamental problems that are baffling the entire committee. No amount of detailed work can minimize the importance of such issues as the financing of benefit payments and the extent to which marketing restrictions should be made compulsory.

Experience under the old AAA indicates that control methods necessarily become more and more drastic to offset the natural tendency on the part of farmers to claim the benefits of short crops without accepting restrictions. To make the rewards for compliance large enough to be permanently attractive would be very expensive. To clamp rigid quotas on individual farms would certainly be undemocratic and probably unconstitutional. How far should the new legislation go in either direction?

That is not the whole dilemma. Secretary Hull has just made a strong appeal to farmers to support his trade agreements policy. In his opinion agricultural prosperity is definitely tied up with expanding exports. "Unless export outlets for cotton are maintained," he says, "large areas in the South will ultimately be used for the production of farm products which in the past have customarily been purchased from the Middle West." Thus, farmers in general would suffer.

Exports will not move abroad freely, however, if control of crops holds prices at artificially high levels. Already the foreign markets for American cotton have contracted because of crop restrictions and price-pegging loans. If agriculture is again to be put into a Federal strait-jacket, Mr. Hull's efforts to stimulate foreign buying of American crops are all too likely to prove futile. Before enacting a permanent agricultural policy Congress must certainly confront the inconsistency between current proposals and the Administration's foreign trade policy.

The effects of Federal farm regulation upon the entire country must also be considered. Former President Hoover has this week given timely point to the difficulties encountered in trying to operate "a system part collectivist and part regulated private enterprise." The country has seen how the earlier control of cotton led logically to the attempted control of potatoes and peanuts. By the same inevitable tendency farm quotas would lead toward industrial quotas. The road toward Fascist totalitarianism is a broad and easy highway.

Congress will be asked to choose, therefore, between a definitely collectivist policy and less drastic measures to help the farmer overcome his difficulties. That choice, as Secretary Wallace long ago pointed out, is a grave one. But it is difficult to believe that Congress will choose the road to centralized dictation if the full implications of that course are given any consideration.

The Reserve Board Acts.

The action of the Federal Reserve Board in reducing margin requirements on stock purchases is a welcome indication that it appreciates the importance of relaxing restrictions that have accentuated the severity of recent declines. The new margin requirements will still be well over twice the average margin once considered adequate. Hence, the reduction does not imply any pronounced relaxation of regulatory restrictions that would remove safeguards against undue speculative advances.

Action might have been taken sooner to check the widespread liquidation that led to demoralizingly rapid declines in quotations. Successful regulation in any field of economic activity, in fact, depends upon careful timing designed to avert crises instead of to repair damage already done. However, the new regulations will not only help to arrest further forced liquidation, but should to some extent encourage confidence.

Furthermore, they will undoubtedly have a favorable psychological effect upon the market. For, rightly or wrongly, the belief had been gaining ground that the SEC and the Federal Reserve authorities were insufficiently aware of the indispensability of smoothly functioning securities markets capable of absorbing a large volume of offerings without precipitating disproportionately large price declines. The action now taken is a tacit admission that the authorities have been alarmed by recent developments and at last realize that their regulatory policies have been too severe and too rigid.

High margin requirements and other restrictions, however, are not the only cause of the demoralized state of the securities market. Its so-called "thinness" is also due to factors which the SEC and the Federal Reserve officials are powerless to influence. One of the chief obstacles to a stable market, capable of taking care of a normal volume of selling, is the excessively high rates of taxation imposed upon capital gains.

In addition to the capital gains tax, unwisely high income taxes of all kinds have, as Winthrop W. Aldrich points out in his discussion of the stock market break, "greatly reduced and in many cases eliminated a factor which is always helpful to the markets in bad times and always helpful in sustaining new capital issues, namely, the savings of men of substantial means, savings which, in the past, have gone in greater degree than other savings into the purchase of corporate shares."

Apart from heavy taxation, there are various reasons why individual investors, large and small, are less inclined to put their savings in industrial share issues. The failure of the market for new capital issues to revive is a source of especial worry because it cuts off access to funds needed for developing new undertakings and expanding existing ones. In short, it is a major obstacle to economic progress.

The basis for a flourishing capital market rests upon the confidence of issuers and buyers that the new capital can be profitably employed. Under the capitalistic system the motive which keeps industry active and expanding is the expectation of profit. The time may come—some people think it close at hand—when a collectivist state will take over the functions of the private entrepreneur and the profit motive will be eliminated. But the Government is not yet operating on that assumption.

Today profit is the recognized reward of risk-taking, and the entrepreneur works to secure that reward. What Adam Smith wrote in the eighteenth century is still true, namely, that "the lowest ordinary rate of profit must always be something more than what is sufficient to compensate the occasional losses to which every employment of stock (capital) is exposed."

Business men whose profit margins are shrinking as a result of regulatory policies and heavy taxes are at present disposed to mark time. Their reluctance to embark on new ventures is the greater because of a feeling that the Administration is disposed to underrate the importance of profits as a motivating force. This business hesitation does not result from hostility to constructive regulation, but from the very reasonable fear that far-reaching policies lightly initiated by the Government will have unpredictable and destructive consequences.

Advice To The Foreign-Born.

Two very different pronouncements have this week been addressed to foreign racial groups in this country, in each case from an authoritative source.

One of these came from Berlin, on Monday. There the official organ of Gen. Goering, director of the Nazi Four-Year Plan, asserted that Germans living in other lands should become active agents of German culture, as exemplified by the Third Reich. "Conscious German groups abroad," the statement said, "must feel with the National Socialist ideology and eventually accept it wholeheartedly."

Here in Washington, on Wednesday, the Foreign Minister of Norway touched on the same issue of national allegiance, while broadcasting to his fellow countrymen, in the United States and in Scandinavia. But the conclusion voiced by Dr. Halvdan Koht was as acceptable as that of Gen. Goering's editor was inadmissible.

"I have noticed," said the Norwegian Foreign Minister, "that the Norwegians who have settled here, and the couple of millions descended from them, feel themselves thoroughly American and at the same time are proud of recalling their Norwegian parentage. The two feelings are not in contradiction with each other. On the contrary, there is a perfect harmony between them just because of the resemblance of social and political conditions and ideas reigning in their new home as well as in the old country."

Doubtless without intention, but none the less neatly, Dr. Koht has shown why Norwegian-Americans need feel no division of allegiance, while it is impossible for patriotic German-Americans to follow the lead extended to them by the regime at present in power in Berlin. Between the American and Norwegian democracies there is the close kinship of common political ideals and social purposes. Between the American democracy and the Nazi dictatorship there is complete intellectual and philosophical antagonism.

That is why the German effort to regiment Americans of German origin under the swastika is so deeply resented here, particularly by liberals of German blood. That is why, on the other hand, the presence of Dr. Koht is so welcome to all elements in our population. He comes, on an official mission, to explore the possibility of closer commercial ties between two countries which have long had strong spiritual affinities. And the satisfaction voiced by Secretary Hull at his visit is felt by every American who realizes the notable contribution made by Norway to the strengthening of our democratic tradition.

Fifteen Years After.

Fifteen years is a short time in the life of a nation. So historians of the future, viewing our times against the background of centuries and millennia, may dismiss fascism, the fifteenth anniversary of whose rise to power in Italy was yesterday observed, as but an ephemeral phenomenon. Our generation cannot take so comforting a view. The impact of fascism upon it has been tremendous and far-reaching.

Benito Mussolini, so far as the outside world was concerned, was an obscure individual when he seized the reigns of power on October 28, 1922. Today the doctrines which he then inaugurated are gospel to millions, in many lands.

It may be that they are weaker than the world believes, that the imposing dictatorships erected on the ruin of parliaments and personal liberties are far more fragile than the world believes. It may be that they are nearing their term and that, for precisely this reason, are becoming increasingly blatant.

But such predictions are not backed by assurance. And certainly the world can no longer be as complacent as it was fifteen years ago, when fascism was a cloud no bigger than a man's hand in the bright skies of Italy. For the cloud now covers the horizons not only of Italy but of many other parts of the world as well.

In those 15 years Mussolini has transformed Italy. He has brought order to that easy-going land, even if it resembles the order of a prison. He has disciplined his people, even if the discipline is that of the barracks. And he has made the name of Italy feared, even if, in the long run, the Italian people will gain far less by being feared than they would have gained by continuing to be loved.

But whatever the virtues of the Fascist regime in Italy may be, and to some they will seem dubious virtues at best, the price which the Italian people have paid for Mussolini has been no small one. Liberty has been trampled upon by the dictator. Intellectual life has been reduced to sterility. And in the name of national glory Italy has been plunged on a career of aggression whose ultimate consequences may be disastrous to the world as well as to the country primarily responsible.

Fascism, Mussolini once said, is not an article of export. And in the first years of his regime the Duce made no effort to propagate the seeds of his doctrine abroad. Those seeds were nonetheless carried on the winds of disaster and distress. They took root in Germany. They sprouted in Japan and South America. And while in the older democratic lands the soil has proved to be inhospitable, even these stable countries have not been left unscathed. In a world that is steadily shrinking the contagious character of fascism is as incontestable as it is insidious.

The March on Rome, 15 year ago, was viewed by other peoples with relative indifference. But since then fascism has marched on the world. It constitutes today a challenge to every democratic land, a challenge to the capacity of human beings to govern themselves and to unite for peace; a challenge to those countries which love freedom to maintain unimpaired within their borders those liberties which, in 15 years, have been swept away elsewhere.

A Question Of Definition.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The October 25 edition of The Post carried an editorial entitled "Two Howard Alumni Charges" in which you make the following statement: "The president of an educational institution owes no deference to the alumni."

Without referring to the editorial and its implications, in general, but confining myself to this one sentence, I wish to state that it is as misleading as any statement ever printed in The Post. "Deference," according to my conception of the word, means nothing more or less than a courteous regard for another's wishes. Certainly a president of an educational institution could have no other attitude toward the graduates thereof. If there be a university president in the United States who subscribes to your conclusion, he should be summarily removed and consigned to a job as keeper of a pigsty, in which capacity no leadership need be exemplified or expected.

The elements constituting a university are its buildings and grounds, its students, its faculty, its alumni, its trustees, and its spirit. All of these may change, but the alumni will go on forever. A university is the fostering mother of its graduates, who love and revere it and are interested in its program and progress. And graduates are ever conscious of the fact that a tree is known by the fruit it bears.

I cannot see why any alumnus would not rise up and cry out in righteous indignation if he felt that the administrative head of his alma mater owed no deference to him. Such an idea is foreign to American educational institutions and contrary to any doctrine ever before evinced by or about them.

Howard University is a quasi-public institution. It receives an annual subsidy from the Federal Government. This money comes from taxpayers by way of the Treasury of the United States. It would appear, then, that a president of such an institution not only would owe deference to the alumni as alumni, but also for the additional reason that the alumni are tax-paying citizens having an interest in the way and manner that their money is being spent.

As an alumnus of three of the oldest educational institutions in this country, I deeply regret that you have seen fit to announce this vicious, damaging and untrue doctrine. On behalf of the alumni of the educational institutions in this country, I hereby beseech you to reconsider and rewrite the above-mentioned editorial to the end that no such distorted conception of the duty of a president of a university may go rampant in this land.

EDWARD P. LOVETT.
Washington, Oct. 26.

If "deference" means only "courteous regard for another's wishes" then the validity of this correspondent's point is undeniable. But if "deference" means "a yielding to the opinions or wishes of another," as defined by the dictionary and as intended in the editorial referred to, it is very questionable that the argument is "vicious, damaging, and untrue." —Editor.

Accurate Reporting.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Allow me to thank you for the accurate and intelligent report of my address on the unemployment census before the Washington Academy of Sciences on October 21. The subject is a difficult one and I felt some fears of misquotation. The report of The Post left nothing to be desired as an accurate summary of the points I made which would have news value.

The Algic Strike.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Will you permit me to penetrate into your splendid paper to offer my congratulation for the fine editorial of October 26—"The Attack on Mr. Kennedy." It was brilliant in every way, truthful in revealing the rights of captains of ships flying the flags of our country on the high seas as well as the rancid idiocy of shore agitators and their "sit-down strikes."

That narrow appeal of the maritime union coming out of Baltimore addressed to President Roosevelt demanding that Messrs. Kennedy and Bingh be summarily dismissed from office was disgusting. The same applies to the cablegram sent by the alleged maritime experts to Argentina to have a strike called against all American ships entering their ports.

The wonder to me is that President Roosevelt missed the chance of chastising this C. I. O. gang over in Baltimore. From his valued service in the Navy Department as its Assistant Secretary, he knew the law and should have applied the whip vigorously to the master minds of these malcontents.

Salesgirls' Needs.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Do the salesgirls' champions have a smoke screen over their brains or are they just having fun?

A professor, a Columbia University economist and a merchant get together and sprain their brains in an effort to decide the very least a girl can live on weekly and still be decent. How much do they themselves spend weekly for board and lodging and recreation in their pursuit of happiness or do salesgirls belong to a peculiar species of human animal cut off from the rest of humanity? Why not make it more general? What is the least any of us can live on a week and still be decent? If the professor, the economist and the merchant can't make both ends meet on $15, $18—or to be even more charitable, $21.50—then we can't either.

A salesgirl spends as much or more a year on clothes, coiffures and manicures than a professor, an economist or a merchant. What about a bank roll in case the job doesn't hold out and maybe music lessons or tuition fees, or doesn't a working girl need culture or advancement to remain decent?

"Thwarted Ambition."

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I started out to write a letter of appreciation of The Post, commenting upon the unique keenness of its staff of writers and indicating how much more I enjoy my morning duties because of the short, interesting recess the reading of it affords.

I wanted to tell you about the scrapbook I am making of Tom McCarthy's varied experiences (which, by the way, I plan to loan to shut-ins); about the knowledge gleaned, the laughs I get and so on, etc. It was going to be a rather splendid editorial—but this is what it fell into:

Thwarted Ambition.

I wish that I might wield a pen
As blithely as McCarthy,
And I've a chummy sort of yen
For "Apple Mary" Marthy,

I'm yearning to be funny like
Bob Burns and Alice Hughes;
Advise the world—or break a strike,
Be clever . . . what's the use?

For how can I attain renown—
(They'll do it every time)
The words I use jump up and down

A View Of The Republican Party.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The Republican Party was organized in 1856 and went before the country with John C. Fremont as its candidate on a platform whose most significant plank expressed opposition to the extension of slavery into free territory.

The anti-slavery delegates to the convention were so disgusted with the weakness and indecision of the Republican leaders in the convention that they left in a body before adjournment, but not before they had delivered themselves of a pronouncement which became a prophecy, fulfilled seven years later in the Proclamation of Emancipation.

Four years later Abraham Lincoln, who had introduced a fugitive slave bill in Congress on January 10, 1849, received the Republican nomination and was elected President, due to a split in the Democratic Party.

The pressure of military events forced the tardy Proclamation of Emancipation from President Lincoln, long after the United States Congress had enacted the "Confiscation Act," and the President had administered a severe rebuke to Gen. Fremont for taking emancipation in his own hands, under the confiscation act, which the President refused to use.

Two hundred and fifty thousand colored soldiers were hurled into the war and, according to Theodore Roosevelt, turned the tide in favor of the Union.

After the war came the reconstruction acts, designed to promote the colored group from serfs to citizens. It was at this point that the Republican Party wiped its hands of its responsibility in the premises and left an untrained people to "paddle its own canoe" in very stormy waters.

The great issue which had forced the Republicans into power through no merit of their own was abandoned and has remained abandoned ever since.

Seizing upon a high protective tariff policy in the midst of an unparalleled industrial expansion of the country, as opposed to "free trade" and later a "tariff for revenue only" policies of the nineteenth-century Democracy, the Republicans were able to maintain themselves in power on that one issue for many years.

And when President Woodrow Wilson stated that the Republican Party hadn't had an idea in 50 years he spoke the historic truth.

They never got enough of "high tariff" even after their own high priest of the tariff question—President McKinley—made his great reciprocity speech at Buffalo at the turn of the century. He advocated a policy which the present Administration is now successfully carrying forward under the reciprocal trade agreements negotiated by Secretary Hull with many great commercial nations.

The Republican Party hasn't a single issue with which to go before the people. It has had only two in its entire life. It dropped the first like a hot potato, and didn't know when to drop the second even after having been warned by President McKinley to do so.

And when one listened to the labored lament of former President Hoover on the "sacredness of the ballot," in his Massachusetts utterance, one has a perfect right to inquire what he did to preserve that "sacredness" when President—what has his party done since 1868 to preserve it?

The truth is that the Republican Party as a national organization is dead beyond hope of resurrection.

Tales From The Virginia Woods.

IF IT hadn't been for those CCC boys with their strong shoulders, their jacks and their axes, Charley, we'd probably still be somewhere out in Prince William County, staring at the muddy Virginia side roads and fancying we heard Indians in the forests.

You remember, of course, the dignified old gentleman, with the six-shooter, who was so upset because someone had robbed his family graveyard.

"If I get him, I'll shoot him, sure I will," said he.

You couldn't blame him when he told about how his mother's body had disappeared, and how she had worn no jewelry since the Civil War, and how the robber, of course, came off empty-handed.

Even if the story didn't rock our ink-stained world, somehow, I remember the photograph you took of the old gentleman standing beside the grave. He was pointing down at where the earth had been upturned. All the while, though, Charley, you and I were thinking not of cemeteries or graves but of the bright life of the forest, the gay autumn colors.

All the way down from Washington the old gentleman, who was nearing 70, told of swords and roses, ancestors and "damned Yankees" firing at flags of the South from their gunboats on the Potomac.

Now and then the exhaust on your car sounded like one of those guns. The country was on dress parade. It was in a gold and green uniform.

If you were romantic and nostalgic about it during the ride, you thought of the Virginiascape as one of the old gentleman's ladies of long ago, dressed for the cotillion. You remember, we both got to believing in ghosts, which the old gentleman seemed to pull out his pockets, like peanuts.

* * *

The little cemetery stood all alone, you remember, Charley. It was on a narrow lane, somewhere miles from the CCC camp, and when you looked beyond the markers you saw rolling country and tall grass, and in the distance trees, erect as soldiers of 75 years ago.

"The Yankees came here before I was born," the old gentleman said, drawing himself up proudly.

"My father was a Confederate scout. There were men killed around here. There were cannon. There were swords. The country has changed. But hoofs still seem to thud around here. It was a brave country."

Cowbells tinkled. Somewhere, far beyond, a train whistled as it puffed toward pleasant Virginia villages with sloping lawns. Hounds barked in a nearby field. You heard the CCC boys' axes thudding against trees far away.

* * *

The old gentleman posed by the grave.

"I hope this'll stop grave robbing," he said, mopping his brow. You felt it would, and you couldn't tell just what would happen to the picture, except that it was taken and now the only thing was to get back through the countryside to the city.

How in the world could you have seen that mud hole? There were too many other things to notice—to feel.

A little copperhead slithered to shelter across the path. A rabbit scurried into the underbrush. Deep in the forest you thought you saw a phantom rider, in Confederate gray, wheel on his charger and dart away toward invisible campfires.

Then the mud! Before you knew it, Charley, we were hub-deep in mud, and the old gentleman was swearing, and you and I were swearing as we tried to get the car free.

We tried reverse, low and high, and all sorts of mechanical combinations the early Virginians never heard of. But the mud was eternal and locked us to the earth.

So we started to hike, Charley, and after more than an hour we found the CCC boys, working on a project and whistling and talking. Their overalls were blue as the sky.

* * *

"Well, I'm going in the Navy when I finish my hitch," said one. "My father was a boatswain, and it's the way in my family. The life here is swell. Sometimes I think they feed us too many beans, though."

"It's better than Philadelphia, boy," said another, "better than standing on the street corner . . ."

"Where's the car?" asked another. "We'll get her out. Then it'll be time for chow."

Then we got lost, Charley, and the little hoptoads and lizards streaked across our path, and we weren't thinking about empty graves and ghouls any more, but just that twilight was coming fast.

When we saw the car, we'd discovered an empire.

On the way back the moon came out, you remember. The old gentleman was comfortable, and he talked in low tones. Over in the fields we fancied we heard banjoes being plunked by thick, black hands.

The rider in tattered gray haunted every creek, every ford, every clearing.

National Gambling Figures.

ONE MAN'S GUESS being as good as another's, there is a strong temptation to deal in many billions in guessing the amount of money that Americans gamble in a year. All estimates are futile, because not even the Treasury Department, with its official interest in the income of bookmakers, lottery winners and the operators of slot machines, horse parlors, play rooms and numbers rackets, pretends to have even approximate information.

However, from the data gathered by the National Association of State Racing Commissioners, it would appear that those reckonings which rank gambling among our major industries in the matter of gross turnover are as balmy as the computations of the rumpled horse player who sits him down with a short pencil in the cool of the evening to figure up how much he might have won with a $10 parlay on all the winners that afternoon.

The association's figures for 1935 show that the total mutuel handle on the horses and dogs in the 18 States which permitted either or both vices was only $257,562,663. There should be a printer's dingbat just here to signify that this figure does not include the turnover in New York or Louisiana on either horses or dogs. You may add a hundred millions to the total on behalf of New York and Louisiana if it will make you feel any better. New York bets with bookmakers, not with mutuels, and there is no way of anyone's knowing how much they handle unless, perhaps, the Internal Revenue Department has some special information. Louisiana also is excluded, for the gambling there is strictly felonious as far as the law is concerned.

The 18 States considered in the report are those which permitted and supervised mutuel betting. The total return to the States was only $8,967,932, and this includes $443,336 which the New York Treasury received from a tax on admissions, the State's only participation in the racket. Louisiana got nothing.

• • • •

IT SHOULD BE KEPT in mind that all this represents legal, open gambling. There was nothing furtive about it. Yet in 18 States where open gambling was permitted the total traffic was only a little over a quarter billion.

I am generous enough to assume that an equal amount was wagered through the horse parlors strung along the great, monopolistic chain of horse wires which cross-hatches the country. But I would not go beyond that figure, because most people who frequent horse parlors are smelly bums who wouldn't assay more than an average of six bits per head if you were to frisk them all at one time. If they weren't bums they wouldn't be hanging around horse parlors. And I think I am overestimating their capacity when I rank them even with the people who go out to the tracks to bet, because those who go to the tracks are obviously of a better class.

We often hear the numbers racket spoken of as a great octopus handling five, ten or even more billions a year. But this, too, is illegal and is, moreover, a cheap racket, literally dealing in penny business, although, to be sure, much white money is handled and some folding money, too, though not much. But if 135 open horse parks, including leaky-roof plants, county fairs and harness meets, and 14 dog tracks handle only a quarter billion under legal conditions, and with facilities for the accommodation of high-rollers, is it sensible to think that the scabby criminal dealing out nickel, dime and two-bit slips to errand boys and saloon porters can run up a comparable score, even though you multiply him by many thousands?

• • • •

THE AMERICAN participation in the foreign lotteries is centered in the Irish Hospitals Sweep and, on the basis of our play of seven million in the recent Cesarewitch, may be reckoned at $21,000,000 a year, plus one or two million in the lotteries of other countries.

Florida had legal slot machines for a time, and a shot-in-the-dark estimate, possibly based on the license receipts, has it that they stole $100,000,000 last year. Maybe so, but the slot machine is a grind, and a machine takes about an hour to chew up a $20 bill, what with its teasing kickbacks on the cherries and plums.

Then we have countless petty items, such as raffles and church bingo parties which are very puny when you are talking in big, bold billions.

I undertake no estimate of the total gambling traffic, but the racing figures have a sedative effect on the imagination. The Unknown is always enormous and mysterious, and that is why the incalculable total of the gambling turnover is always reckoned in figures suitable for the national debt.

The Twitchells.

Elmer—Well, did you read the testimony of the family in that recent trial of Montague, the Hollywood "mystery golfer?"

Mrs. Twitchell—No, what about it?

Elmer—It would have done you good. They all testified that when he went out one morning to play golf and didn't show up again for seven years they didn't think it unusual.

Mrs. Twitchell—If what they said is true, that Montague must be the only golfer in the country who is slower getting around a course than you are.

Elmer—He's a very fast golfer, as a matter of fact. It only goes to show that all women don't get as excited as you do when a feller gets tied up a little.

Mrs. Twitchell—You don't call being seven years late getting home from golf being tied up just a little, do you?

Elmer—No, but it shows how broad-minded some women can be. I've never been seven hours late in my life and yet you're always squawking like I was a subject for the Missing Persons broadcast. What I wish you would do is be philosophical like his family was. Why, they even testified that they didn't even discuss his absence.

Mrs. Twitchell—That's all right; when you're late getting home I don't discuss it with anybody but you.

Elmer—I know, but you overdo it. You have got to realize that when a man takes up golf anything can happen.

Mrs. Twitchell—The Montague case certainly proved that!

• • • •

Elmer—I mean he is apt to be gone longer than he expected and the women folks have got to be liberal.

Mrs. Twitchell—You haven't the gall to sit there and tell me you really believe a golfer could go out to play golf and be gone seven years and the family not even give it a thought, do you?

Mrs. Twitchell—It's too bad you're not married to one who thinks if a man takes three and a half years for each nine holes he is a darling.

Elmer—Now, honey, don't be sarcastic. You don't play golf these days or you would know how crowded the links get sometimes.

• • • •

Mrs. Twitchell—You're no Montague, even if you would do pretty well playing golf with a shovel and rake.

Elmer—I don't play with a shovel and rake.

Mrs. Twitchell—Your golf score couldn't be any worse if you did. What're you putting your hat on for?

Elmer—I've got a golf date.

Mrs. Twitchell—I thought this was all leading up to something. Now listen—

Elmer—What?

Mrs. Twitchell—Be back in a few years!

French Government Continues To Stress Stabilization Of Franc And Business; Cantonal Elections Reassuring.

By Jacques Kayser.
Special Correspondence of The Post.

Paris.

THE RECENT fall of the franc, coming at a time when the Chautemps government had just announced its plan to balance the budget of 1938, has stirred up a hornet's nest of pessimistic rumors outside of France and even in France itself.

As always, these rumors by no means reflect the actual state of affairs regarding the French fiscal situation. That situation happens to be serious. But there are enough favorable factors to make a decided improvement possible.

In this connection the question arises as to whether such improvement is likely in the near future. The franc crisis reached its most acute point at the end of June, between the time when the Blum government found itself forced to resign and the moment when, recalled in all haste from Washington, Georges Bonnet took over the ministry of finance.

Bonnet Faced With Empty French Treasury.

M. BONNET found that the national treasury was just about empty. It had on hand no more than 20,000,000 francs and with large-scale obligations due at the end of June.

The drastic measures which he was enabled to take, once Parliament gave the government practically dictatorial power to grapple with the crisis, are well known. For internal as well as international reasons it was found necessary to unhitch the franc from any rigid exchange value. This would have been difficult and expensive to maintain at a time when, because of the new social legislation, France was in a period of economic change.

But, at the same time, the government, in order to tide over the immediate need of funds, made an agreement with the Bank of France for an advance of 15,000,000,000 francs.

This was an emergency measure. What was basically needed, however, was stabilization, both of the financial and of the economic situations. To this end the government applied itself. The decree-laws issued during Parliament's absence included both purely financial measures, such as modifications in imposts, actions to repress fiscal frauds, etc., and economic measures designed to restore confidence to industry and commerce which had suffered during the crisis.

Several days ago, when the franc manifested particular weakness, a cabinet meeting was summoned. It met at Rambouillet, near Paris, where the President of France happened to be spending a holiday. At this meeting the situation was thoroughly canvassed and, at the close, a long declaration was issued which had a very salutary and reassuring effect on public opinion.

Declaration Disclaimed Justification For Doubts.

THIS DECLARATION declared that there was not the slightest technical justification for the recurrent weakness of the franc, that France's financial situation was sound. Some were, to be sure, tempted to say: "The government is whistling in the wind; it is merely defending itself and concealing a defeat by a bold claim of victory." But such cynicism was by no means justified. France's "economic royalists" did not deny that the technique employed by the government was the sound one and one may defer to their judgment since, from the political point of view, they constitute the most intransigent opposition which the Left government has to face.

One of the proofs that the financial health of France is less precarious than some pretend, is that a reasonable balancing of the budget for 1938 is now in the offing.

The draft plan, which the two chambers are expected to vote before the close of the year, in fact, foreshadows an excess of receipts over expenditures of 1,600,000,000 francs. Part of this is to be devoted to a readjustment of salaries of government employes to bring these salaries in line with rising costs of living.

There are other symptoms of returning financial health. If, from the economic point of view, the balance of trade remains unfavorable, internal trade has shown no decline and, despite rate increases, railroad traffic has shown no letting up. From the psychological point of view it is very important to note that, in savings banks, the total of new deposits is in excess of withdrawals. The great majority of these depositors are not capitalists but ordinary folk who know full well—they did it in 1923 and 1926—how to safeguard their savings when there is danger in the air.

Another favorable sign was the consolidation operation of October 5, when some 5,400,000,000 francs worth of bonds came due. The occasion was a critical one for the treasury. But the situation was met with relative ease.

Public Debt And Defense Expenditures Still Heavy.

YET CERTAIN unfavorable aspects of the financial situation must also be pointed out. Some are purely financial; others are political.

The first are the result of the crushing burden of the public debt and of defense expenditures. Out of total expenditures of 52,000,000,000 francs, the debt service, including payments on the floating debt, absorb more than 47 per cent, in contrast to a mere 22 per cent in 1922. Short of a debt conversion operation, difficult to bring about under existing circumstances, or repudiation by the state of its most solemn obligations—which is out of the question—these expenditures cannot be reduced.

Nor can the expenditures for defense purposes be reduced. They have climbed to 22,000,000,000 francs, half of which is included in the special budget. Unfortunately, the international situation is such that, far from being able to reckon on any reduction in such expenditures, the likelihood is that the future may see their increase.

Thus, close to three-fourths of the current expenditures of the French government are devoted to unproductive purposes.

Then, as the communique issued by the cabinet following its Rambouillet meeting pointed out, there are the disturbing factors arising out of an international situation that is far from good; out of the continuance of economic inquietude and of social unrest. With respect to the latter, the government has made it clear that it will not tolerate the sabotage by large employers of the social legislation placed on the books last year, nor will it tolerate any violations of contracts by labor groups.

Government Opposes Control Of Exchanges.

FINALLY, there is the uneasiness regarding the financial situation itself. Some have spread the rumor that the government, in order to save the franc, would go so far as to impose a rigorous control of the exchanges; in other words, that it would follow the example of Gribouille, who, to protect himself from a wetting by the rain, threw himself into the war. Actually the government is utterly opposed to any control of the exchanges, both for external and internal reasons.

French foreign policy is based upon collaboration with the democracies and an essential aspect of that collaboration is the tripartite monetary agreement of September, 1936. The value of this agreement to France was discovered by M. Bonnet while Ambassador in Washington. And from the internal point of view it is clear that the control of the exchanges would solve nothing, neither the budgetary problem nor that of the balance of payments.

On the contrary, control of the exchanges would be a step toward dictatorship. And it is the will of the French people and their leaders to preserve democracy by employing only democratic means bringing about necessary reforms.

In the meantime, the cantonal elections have demonstrated that the social equilibrium and the political stability of the republic are in no danger. Some had predicted a sweep for the extremists. But the country freely voted for order, progress and peace.

Borgese's Brilliant Book.

YESTERDAY in Italy there was celebrated with the regimented fanfare customary on such occasions in totalitarian states, the fifteenth anniversary of the March on Rome.

Much water has passed under the bridge, much blood has been spilled, since that day in 1922, when Benito Mussolini, emerging from a pullman car that had brought him from Milan (there never was any march on Rome in any literal sense) rushed to the royal palace, and was made premier.

The complacence and even enthusiasm with which so many in this country viewed the triumph of fascism in Italy has now largely waned. Fascism is a phenomenon no longer confined to that kingdom alone. It has conquered elsewhere and would-be imitators of Mussolini are numerous even in countries long wedded to democracy. Most disturbing of all, the collective manifestations of fascism, it is now recognized, tend to shake the very foundations of Western civilization and plunge the world into a new abyss of terror, chaos, and war.

• • • •

YET, IN ITS inception, fascism was Italian and had its roots deep in the soil of Italy. And it is to the examination of these roots and of the unlovely flowers they have nourished both in Italy and abroad that Prof. Borgese addresses himself in this work.

One-time foreign and later literary editor of the Corriera della Sera of Milan, one of the greatest newspapers in Europe in pre-Fascist days, professor of aesthetics at Milan University, author of novels and literary criticisms translated into many languages, Prof. Borgese has for the past six years lived in the United States. At present, he holds the post of professor of literature at the University of Chicago.

His book is not only a superb historical work, it is also a consummate piece of literature, not the least remarkable for having been written directly in English. Luminous and profound, full of striking phrases and brilliant characterizations, it is a magnificent contribution.

• • • •

FASCISM, as Prof. Borgese makes clear, was not the creation of Mussolini. "No man is strong enough to shake the earth." The intellectual and emotional seeds of blackshirt despotism can be traced back many centuries. It had its unwitting progenitor in Dante, who, the real founder of the nation, endowed it at birth with an inferiority complex. Machiavelli, in playing up the idea that politics must be divorced from morality, and conquest and success made the only standards of political life, contributed his share. And there were others from Rienzi to d'Annunzio who also played a role in setting the stage for Mussolini.

There were, of course, counter-currents, notably those of the Risorgimento, but they never reached full flood tide, and were swept back after the war. Then it was that "Mussolini acted upon the Italian mind and conquered it; then, made strong by this conquest, he tried to win the world."

• • • •

PROF. BORGESE scorns the purely Marxian interpretation of fascism as the conservative reaction against the attacking proletariat and scornfully dismisses the statement that Mussolini is or at any time intended to be the tool of the capitalists. If, in supporting him and his blackshirts in the days before 1922, the Italian bankers and industrialists expected him to be just that events have since shown how foolish they were. Mussolini's plan was, as it always had been, says the author:

To drive mad the passions of others, and, having deprived them of their intellectual independence, to make them the tools of his own passion. At length, he managed to do so even with the Italian capitalists, who fondly fancied they had drafted him and his bravoes for their purpose. They wanted to use him momentarily for some saturnalia of revenge; he permanently subjugated them. Now he is leading the chain which they drag . . .

Nor, on the other hand, does Borgese take much stock in the conventional theory that obtains acceptance in circles enamored of Mussolini that he "saved Italy from Bolshevism." As Mussolini himself wrote on July 2, 1921: "To say that there still exists a Bolshevist peril in Italy is to substitute certain insincere fears for the reality. Bolshevism is vanquished."

• • • •

MUSSOLINI, the author sees as essentially an anarchic personality. As a Socialist, he had sought to win his personal freedom by the freedom of the others. He failed. Then, according to Borgese, he decided to "conquer his freedom against the others." And less than four years after the March on Rome, there was erased from Italy "all vestiges of what had been called modern and Western civilization. By the end of 1926, the work—or wreckage—was complete; perhaps the smallest of revolutions, but certainly the greatest involutions."

In all Italy, there was but one free man—Mussolini—but even he was not entirely free. He still lacked freedom of movement in a world of which Italy was only a minor part. Thus, says Borgese, having conquered Italy and made it subject to his anarchic will, he sought to conquer the world. The war on Ethiopia had not the slightest economic justification. "Violence for the sake of violence was his purpose, and no rationalization of the Ethiopian enterprise would stand the test of reason and fact."

There will be many who will take issue with Borgese's off-hand dismissal of the economic interpretation of fascism, and disagree with what they will deem his overemphasis on the psychological factors. But Borgese's theory is provocative, and is backed up with brilliant analysis.

• • • •

AFTER ETHIOPIA, Spain, where, for the first time in history, the ruler engaged his nation in a secret war, "not only without asking about its will and feelings but even without permitting it to know what liberties he was taking with its blood and gold."

There is much else in this stimulating and beautiful book worthy of being singled out for attention. No review can do justice to the broad canvas on which Borgese, with high art and a passionate devotion to human dignity so ruthlessly stamped out in his native land, has painted the picture of how fascism came to be and what it has done. It is a black picture, indeed. But the note upon which he ends is not hopeless. There was a Goliath before Mussolini. But there was also a David. And in a very moving closing chapter entitled "As for Our Brothers in Italy," he points out that the new David must be the Italian people themselves.

"Not from others will the Italians receive freedom, but from themselves; not from Death will they have life, but from Life."

"GOLIATH," by G. A. Borgese. (Viking Press, $3.)

IT'S ALMOST TIME for the committee to pick those 200 books to be presented to the Nation by the American Booksellers . . . President Roosevelt will accept the gift, known as the "White House Library," in behalf of the Nation early in November . . . This idea originated in 1929 when President Hoover moved into the White House and missed the presence of any books in the Presidential home . . . When this fact became known, the American Booksellers Association decided to remedy the omission by presenting an ideal library . . . Some books are handed down to us; some we choose; and others, apparently, we have thrust upon us . . .

KATHERINE DUNLAP, whose "Encore" received just that from the critics last summer, writes me from Boston that she is completing a second book . . . Tom McCarthy

Becomes a Ranch Owner.

Ah admits, pard, that the artist fellow may have done a mighty purty thing with muh face, but ah shore likes the hat. And ah got a right to wear it!

TOM McCARTHY.

You means to tell ya haven't heard? Why, bust mah cinch straps, if it didn't take place no longer that five hours ago. Ah'm a rancher now. Ah'm a Colorado rancher, suh! Don't anger me none afore ah unwields mah shootin' irons.

• • • •

WELL, SIR, the foregoing may not be literate but that's the way I've been thinking for the last couple of hours. Because there's no doubt about it, I'm a rancher!

I don't think I'll actually put the old Bar X, or even the Bar B. Q., out of business. But I've a claim which should set along with the best of them. I own a ranch.

If you want to get mean about it, throw me down, hog-tie me and get right at the truth, I might have to do a bit of explaining. But I'd still claim I've got a right to wear that hat.

I wasn't expecting to find myself a rancher. I was just sitting there thinking about a column. And then, before I knew it, I was a man of the Old West.

The fine thing about it is that I know just about where the ranch is. I've been within a few miles of it. In fact, I played poker in Kremmling, Colo., last summer. And the ranch is only 10 miles out of Kremmling.

• • • •

I WAS JUST sitting in the office, peaceful like, as I said, when this friend of mine came in.

"Mac," he said, "I'm going to give you my ranch."

Well, sir, when I picked myself off the floor and got my breath, I asked him how big it was. I won't say that his answer dropped me again. I won't even admit that it staggered me. What if it is only 80 acres? Anything west of the Mississippi is a ranch. And I'm right in the center of the cow country!

Yes, sir; I know just about where it would be. I know how Kremmling sets in a little basin between the Rockies and I know how the sun goes down there. I've seen it move across the purple sage and up the green slopes of the hills. I've seen it flare in the lush green atop the buttes. No; it's the sun I'm talking about now. Not the ranch.

But it is pretty country, even if it's pretty rugged and somehow fierce. What if the snow does drift 30 feet deep? It's my own place, and that ought to insure privacy anyhow.

The neighbors' cows won't even bother me so much. I know they've got a right to wander over my 80 acres, because my friend never did use it for range. But then, I don't think they'll be able to gallop around too much when the snow sets in this winter.

At that, I may be able to avoid the snow. Because the ranch is nestled right under a little hill. It would be a big hill back here, but in Colorado, where they grow them for size, it's just one step ahead of a butte.

The tourists call the hill "Saddleback Mountain." We natives call it "Razorback Mountain." And that's what I'll call it, pard.

I'm not sayin' that this ranch of mine is any great shakes as living quarters, but it's got a cabin, a corral and a woodshed. Not only that, but it's got a flagpole and a birdhouse.

I admit that I didn't see a bird in the 48 hours I spent around Kremmling last summer. But you never can tell when that birdhouse will come in handy. It's right over the gable, and I might want to keep chickens. I can fry an egg. And the only difficulty I see would be in climbing up to the birdhouse to get the eggs.

• • • •

THE RANCH LOOKS good in pictures, even if the cabin is made only of logs. But the thing that's really sold me on the idea is the deed. That's got my name on it and it's been sworn to before a notary public. That's official!

If you want to come around, I can show you the very paragraph on the deed that I'm talking about. I'm thinking of the one which guarantees "That said party of the second part shall quietly enjoy said lands." The party of the second part means me.

I admit that I'm also interested in the part of the deed which says that I shall have the "undivided interest in the southeast one-quarter, in Range 81, west of the sixth principal Meridian." But I don't know exactly what that means.

However, I don't have any trouble figuring out that part about "quiet enjoyment." My friend tells me that a man can live for $5 a week in that country. That's enjoyment!

The quiet part means that there will be nobody to disturb me, except myself, and maybe Walter Craven, who lives on the other side of Razorback and has a cattle run across my property. Walter, of course, can drop in once and again—every three months or so, if he doesn't overdo it. I'm going to get my firewood from Walter, so I guess I can put up with that.

There's only one drawback to all this, though: I don't know how to play a guitar. I guess I'll just have to tap out the rhythm with a piece of kindling, while I sit there before my fire with the wind howling outside and myself howling inside.

Because, even if I can't play the guitar, I'm not going to let that stand between me and my singing. I always did like cowboy songs, and now that I've got a right to sing them, nothing is going to stop me.

I'm sure going to like to let loose before the fire on some of those cold nights with sad tales of "Utah Venero," "Utah Carroll," and "Cheyenne." But the one I'm really waiting to sing is the one which goes:

"Oh, a man there lives on the Western plain,
With a ton of fight, and an ounce of brain."

Personally, I always did feel that would be an equitable distribution. The only thing that worries me is that my friend expects me to deed the ranch back to him and his wife next week in a joint-ownership. He's trying to tell me that I'm just a "dummy" owner.

But I've got the deed!

FHLB Workers Society Opens Medical Co-op

Clinic Provides Treatment for 2,000; Head Defends 'Group Practice.'

The Group Health Association, Inc., of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board employes yesterday opened to inspection its elaborately-equipped clinic at 1328 I street northwest. There, beginning Monday, the medical staff will provide what is described as complete medical and surgical diagnosis and treatment to approximately 2,000 employes of the board and the affiliated Home Owners Loan Corporation, Federal Home Loan Banking system and the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation.

The association has been criticized by the District Medical Association, which, in a resolution, recently expressed disbelief the medical service offered by the association "can be kept at the same level of quality as that prevailing in private practice."

But Dr. Henry Rolf Brown, medical director of the association, declared yesterday the clinic would provide its members with a diagnostic service out of reach of persons of moderate means, including laboratory, cardiographic and X-ray examinations. He said his staff is equipped to treat virtually all ailments except alcoholism, drug addiction, neuro-surgical cases and mental disorders requiring institutional care.

Denies "Unethical" Charge.

Dr. Brown denied the association's plan was a form of socialized medicine or that there is anything "unethical" about it. He described it as "group practice provided at moderate cost."

The question of group health services is to be discussed tomorrow night at a meeting at the Mayflower Hotel at which Dr. Richard Cabot, of Harvard University, will be principal speaker. Dr. Cabot has made a special study of such plans, and his audience will include representatives of insurance companies and health organizations from other cities. W. F. Penniman, assistant general manager of the HOLC, and president of the Group Health Association, will preside.

The association in a statement yesterday said the Federal Home Loan Bank Board has granted $20,000 a year for two years to the association. It was pointed out that time lost by employes because of illness has cost the board as much as $500,000 a year.

Pay $2.20 a Month.

Unmarried members of the association pay $2.20 a month for benefits of the plan. Married employes pay $3.30 a month and the service extends to their families. Hospital care in semiprivate room is provided up to a period of three weeks for a given illness, but members who desire private rooms may have them by paying the difference between the cost of the room and $4 a day.

Membership in the association is voluntary, and resignations are permissible at any time. About 90 per cent of the employes of the board and its affiliates are said to have joined.

The medical staff, headed by Dr. Brown, consists of Dr. Raymond E. Selders, Dr. Allen E. Lee, Dr. Edmond D. Wells, Dr. R. Stephen Hulburt and Dr. M. Scandiffio. The technical staff comprises Mrs. Mildred Dawes Davis and Julia M. Colfelt, registered nurses; Mary Frances Stuart, George E. McDuffie, Helen A. Straessley, Olive M. Williams and Nellie D. Perkins.

R. T. Berry is secretary-treasurer of the organization, and the trustees include W. C. Kirkpatrick, Horace Russell, Ormond E. Loomis, Charles K. Berlin, Lawrence E. Ring, John W. Ballard, C. D. Otterson and Ivan D. Carson. There is a woman's auxiliary headed by Mrs. Elizabeth D. Glover.

Counsel Assails Ross 'Inquisition'

Frank P. Moncure, counsel for Walter J. Ross, young Marine accused of slaying Elmer J. Davidson, charged yesterday that his client's imprisonment at Alexandria "smacked of inquisition practices." Moncure also promised "surprising disclosures" when the case comes to trial.

Until Thursday afternoon Ross had been held incommunicado at the Alexandria Police Station, where, according to his counsel, he was docketed under a false name. He is now in the Alexandria jail awaiting action by Judge Frederick W. Coleman on Moncure's application to have Ross transferred to the Stafford County jail. Judge Coleman has set tomorrow morning at 10 o'clock for hearing on the application.

The young Marine's father, Walter J. Ross, of Aberdeen, Md., was permitted to see his son Thursday night.

Orphange Matron Gets Four Years for Fraud

Putnam, Conn., Oct. 28 (AP).—Mrs. Isabelle Provandie, 56-year-old deposed matron of the Windham County Temporary Home for Children, was sentenced to serve from four to six years in State prison today for embezzlement in the administration of the orphanage.

She appeared in Superior Court a few hours after her husband, Philip C. Provandie, former superintendent of the home, was convicted on indecent-assault charges brought by three girl inmates of the institution, and sentenced to a one-year jail term. Mrs. Provandie pleaded guilty to 47 counts of embezzlement.

Crash Kills Flier On Atlantic Hop

Rails to Seek New Increases In All Tariffs

Horizontal Boost in Freight Rate Charges May Be Asked of I. C. C.

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, Oct. 28.—Leaders of the Nation's railroad industry drafted requests for new freight and passenger rate increases today.

Directors of the Association of American Railroads formulated their recommendations in a closed session for submission to the full membership tomorrow.

J. A. Farmer, member of the organization's traffic advisory committee, predicted they would ask the Interstate Commerce Commission to authorize a "horizontal increase" in freight charges.

It was recalled that a 15 per cent general freight rate boost was advocated at a recent meeting of carrier offices in Washington. On the basis of 1936 operations, when the freight revenue of class 1 roads amounted to $3,308,541,000, that would mean an annual increase of approximately $500,000,000.

By the Associated Press.

A proposal by seven railroads to purchase and dismember the Minneapolis & St. Louis Railroad Co. encountered opposition yesterday from C. E. Boles, assistant finance director of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Over the Coffee

By Harlan Miller

A forgotten melody is haunting President Roosevelt—a tune he liked very much, but can't recapture now, for the life of him.

* * *

Possibly it goes something like "Anchors Aweigh" and a little like "Memories." If you happen to think of it, phone the White House and hum a snatch to an aide.

* * *

Senator Capper's favorite tune, should he be coming to your house tonight, is "The Isle of Capri" . . . He's one of the most enthusiastic and one of the worst dancers in Washington, so say his political opponents.

"—when they dance the party ends"

Statesmen in Washington are unusually sensitive to music . . . J. F. C. O'Connor, the Comptroller of Currency and the fortunate gentleman seen so often with Elissa Landi, has a weakness for "California, Here I Come," Strange, for a Californian!

* * *

Both Jim Farley and Congressman O'Connor, of New York, beam when the orchestra strikes up "When Irish Eyes Are Smiling"—so orchestras usually do. And what a beam there boys carry!

* * *

That big rancher from Texas, Congressman Kleburg, feels like letting out a big "Yippee!" when he hears "Eyes of Texas," which to some Texans is better than the fifth symphony.

* * *

But Senator Connally is reputed to hate "Eyes of Texas" because once a political adversary used it as a theme song in a campaign. But that's just on the surface; deep down he just loves "Eyes of Texas."

* * *

Until recently the Duke of Windsor rather fancied "There's a Small Hotel." . . . But I'll bet he'll fall hard for "Have You Any Castles, Baby?" while inspecting the housing situation on this side.

* * *

That insidious and artful young maestro of the Shoreham hints that if Senator McAdoo likes the Shoreham blue room it will be a psychic throwback to the fact that he was once married in the blue room at the White House . . . Touche, Barnee!

* * *

The same reason might hold good in case it develops that Senator McAdoo doesn't like the Shoreham's blue room.

* * *

Back around 1915 Mr. McAdoo was the tango king of the Capital . . . The years have slipped by, and now Mr. McAdoo excels at the waltz . . . I'd give $1 to see him do the Big Apple, though, in defiance of the ukase of Department of Interior lassies that it's a rude dance.

"—from tango king to waltz regent"

Adolf Hitler, the big donner und blitzen man from Berlin, has a soft spot for "Wien Wien," so goes the grapevine among the musicians, who find out everything after midnight.

* * *

It wouldn't make a good war song, but Washington musicians are ready to play it at a moment's notice should Adolf goosestep into their night club.

* * *

That gilded darling of the gods, Chip Roberts, is strong for "Pardon My Southern Accent" and "Glory to Old Georgia" . . . "Is It True What They Say About Dixie" is right down Senator Reynolds' alley both musically and politically.

* * *

All in all, it might be better if some of Washington's statesmen sang songs instead of making speeches.

* * *

The President's daughter, Anna Boettiger, is fond of "The Night Is Young and You're So Beautiful" . . . Mrs. Jock Whitney's current delight is "Where Are You?" . . . Mrs. Senator Copeland blushes when they play "Halo Around the Moon" . . . Marvin McIntyre is a great one for "Happy Days Are Here Again" . . . When Mr. and Mrs. Jock Whitney dance together at one of their own parties it's a signal to the musicians to pack up their instruments—the party is over.

Montgomery Extension of Park Allowed

Capital Planning Body Takes Action on Four Vital Matters.

Joint Committees Will Confer on Traffic, Flood Control.

The National Capital Park and Planning Commission, meeting yesterday, took four important steps. These were:

Voting to support the Maryland-National Capital Park and Planning Commission on the latter's zoning policy.

Authorization of the national group's chairman to name a committee to confer with a Maryland group on matters of common interest.

Plans for acquisition of Rock Creek Unit No. 3, which will extend the park to Garrett Park, Md., were described by Irving C. Root, chief engineer, and Curtis Walker, land officer of the Maryland-National Capital Park and Planning Commission. Appraisal value of approximately $200,000 was aproved by the commission, which also indorsed the boundaries of the new unit.

Basin Conference Held.

A report was presented by John Nolen, jr., director of planning, on the Potomac Basin conference, which was held last week at the call of the water resources committee of the national resources committee. At the session, Nolan said, he cited two major projects which would develop the basin's water resources. These were the conversion of the old C. & O. Canal into a recreational utility, and construction of the George Washington Memorial parkway to Great Falls. The latter is already under way, while the former is still in the planning stage.

Frederic A. Delano, chairman, who presided yesterday, appointed a permanent sub-committee to continue studies at the water resources committee's request, Nolan said. Its members are Engineering Commissioner Dan I. Sultan, J. B. Gordon, District sanitary engineer, and Nolen himself.

Joint Meeting Planned.

In another co-ordination move, Chairman Delano was authorized to designate representatives of the District government, Bureau of Public Roads and other affected agencies to meet with a Maryland committee and take up mutual problems relating to traffic, flood control, highway development, etc.

One of the most urgent items on the agenda will be the Bladensburg Peace Cross situation—how the flood menace may be relieved and traffic hazards reduced.

Resuming the meeting this morning, the planners will consider a proposal to build a municipal reservoir on the site of Fort Totten, with consequent demolition of the historic Civil War citadel. The project has been carefully studied by the District Water Department and the United States Engineer's Office, which have jurisdiction over the Capital's water supply, but the commission is expected to frown on the scheme.

Thousands of dollars have been spent on restoration of Fort Totten and other Civil War forts, also on land acquisition for the Fort drive, and indications are that the planning body will not give its approval to a project which would partly nullify the improvements that have been made.

Gunman Takes $25 From Drugstore at 14th and Decatur

An unmasked white gunman, brandishing a nickel-plated revolver, held up the Campbell Pharmacy, Fourteenth and Decatur streets northwest last night, and escaped with $25 from the cash register.

Irving W. Saperstein and Gregory Pigg, clerks in the store at the time, were preparing to close when the robber entered.

9-Year Auto Ride Ends Here Today

Three Brazilian highway engineers who left Rio de Janeiro by auto for Washington more than nine years ago will reach journey's end when they roll up to the Pan American Union Building some time this morning.

Crossing mountains, hacking their way through jungles and fording streams, the expedition, composed of Leonidas Borges de Oliveira, commander; Francisco Lopez de la Cruz, observer, and Mario Fava, mechanic, has traveled 15,000 miles and traversed 14 countries.

They made their epic trip in the interest of an international highway between North and South America.

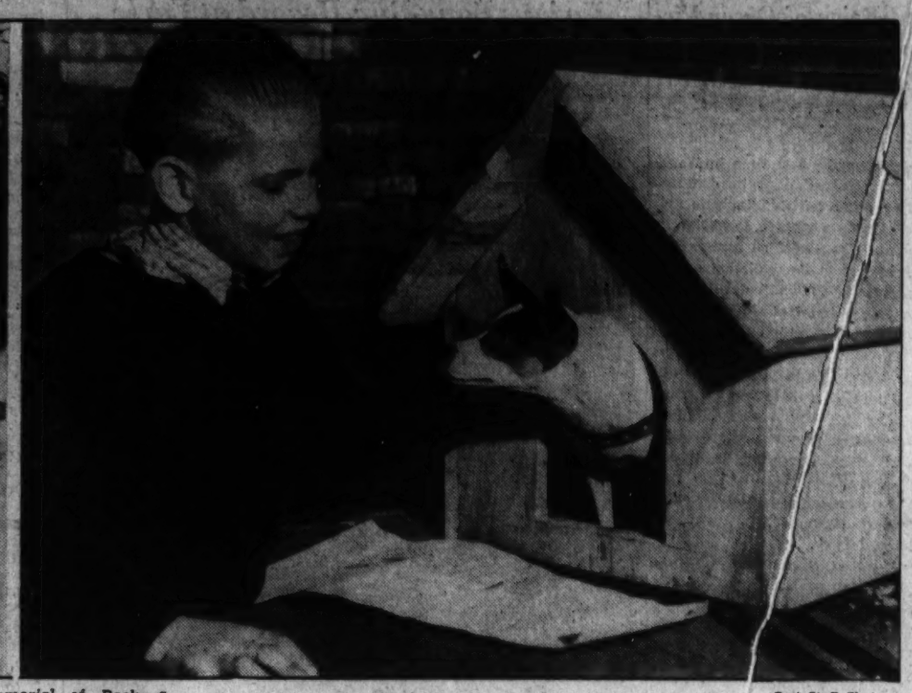
Dogs in the News—A Home—And a Memorial



Little Billy Morgan stands over the grave—and also the memorial—of Bock, a French poodle now dead 20 years. As part of an annual Halloween rite, boys who play at the Mitchell Park Playground will dangle a cotton "ghost" of Bock over his grave tomorrow night. 'From Ghosties and Ghoulies and Things That Go Bump in the Night'—Children Will Gasp When Wraith Appears Over Poodle's Tomb.

Cynics sneer and say there are no ghosts, but cynics don't know everything. After tomorrow night, the little boys and girls at Mitchell Park Playground, Twenty-third and S streets northwest, will be able to say that they not only saw a ghost, but the ghost of a dog at that.

It will appear, as night falls, over the grave of "Bock," a French poodle that has been dead these 20 years or more.

Bock, a lovable pet that lived to be 14, has a grave that is as inviolable as that of any human being; indeed, more so. It is protected by law. The City of Washington has pledged its honor that it will not be disturbed.

The French poodle, a beautiful brown animal, was owned by the family of Mrs. Elizabeth Patterson Mitchell. His death was a particularly pathetic one. A two-legged creature who called himself a "human being" gave the dog a kick, causing an internal injury. An operation was performed, but it did no good. Bock bled to death.

In her will, filed in the office of the register of wills on April 22, 1916, Mrs. Mitchell wrote the following provision:

"To the City of Washington, D. C., I leav my lots on S street to the memory of Morton Mitchell, for a park. It was intended for our home, and our old dog, whose bones rest there, is not to be disturbed."

The word "disturbed" was underlined.

The grave, shaded by a gnarled plum tree, bears a headstone and encircled by a fence erected by the District after the property became a playground. Laughter and the shouts of happy children roll across it every day.

These children, by the way, make up a junior League of Nations. The playground is in the embassy section of the city, and to it are drawn yellow-skinned, doll-eyed youngsters from the Siamese Legation, children from the Chinese Embassy and the Egyptian and Turkish Legations. Soon there will be little Nazis for the German Embassy is preparing to build on adjacent property.

But just as the playground is cosmopolitan, so is it democratic. The children of the millionaire play together with those of the millionaire's chauffeur or with those of the delicatessen dealer nearby.

As dusk falls tomorrow, the children of Mitchell Park Playground, masquerading as witches and Pierrots and Pierrettes will duck for apples, play hide-and-go-to-seek and then gather around the gave of Bock.

In the plum tree will be one of the older boys. While the eyes of yougsters pop, he will dangle Bock's ghost—a phantom made of snowy cotton, vaguely shaped into the form of a French poodle.

It is an annual Halloween rite, this appearance of Bock's ghost, and Miss Sadie Lewis, the playground director, thinks Mrs. Mitchell would like it. The children do.

Gen. Schley Calls Modern Warfare 'Engineer's Game'

"War today is an engineer's game," said Maj. Gen. Julian L. Schley, chief of Army Engineers, in an address before the Engineer Chapter of the District of Columbia Reserve Officers Association.

Although Gen. Schley was present, he was unable to deliver his speech because of a throat ailment, and the message was read for him by Lieut. Col. Stuart C. Godfrey, Engineer Corps, United States Army.

Calling attention to the fact that "in any emergency the country will have to rely on officers of the Organized Reserves," Gen. Schley declared that Army plans call for the raising of an army of 1,000,000 men within eight months after the date of mobilization.

After pointing out that most Reserve officers are organized in fighting detachments, he asserted that "to date the Army has not developed auxiliary forces to support, keep and provide for the combat units."

Other speakers included Maj. W. D. Luplow, district engineer; Capt. Dowell Gullatt, Capt. C. G. Holley, Capt. D. G. White, Judge Robert E. Mattingly and Isaac Gans. Col. F. B. Ryan presided at the meeting.

Traveler Pictures Hatred in Germany

An undercurrent of hate permeating the land; a people without butter, salt or fats for their tables; a press dominated by the propaganda committee of the government's system of espionage that extends into the homes; these were the conditions in Germany painted yesterday by George Harris in a talk before the Cosmopolitan Club at its weekly meeting at the Carlton Hotel.

Harris, who spent three months in Europe during the past summer, said that there will be no general European war because Germany is not equipped to last more than six weeks in such a war and Italy but a few weeks longer. This informtaion, could last a year. This information, Harris said, came from a high English official.

Friends in Germany, he said, told him that Germany's plan is to get rid of all Jews.

Skeptic Sees Light, Changes Mind on Glen Echo 'Ghost'

A skeptic who saw a light in Glen Echo early yesterday is beginning to think there might be something in those stories about the deserted house next door.

The vacant house near Wixasset Station is set in a hollow next to the home of J. C. Leger. For several weeks Leger has been annoyed by a lot of gullible people who thought they saw a bright, snow-white light shining from an attic window in the lonely dwelling.

Leger has clung stolidly to his original opinion—"I don't know anything about any ghost"—ever since the stories began to circulate.

But Wednesday, at 11:30 p. m., and again at 3:30 a. m. Thursday, Leger observed the ghostly light that so many others in the neighborhood have vividly described, and now he is reported to share the general feeling of the community that "something ought to be done about it."

Compromise Wage Slated to Be Set

The District Minimum Wage Board conference, which meets in executive session tonight, is expected to fix a compromise salary somewhere between the $14.57 weekly wage asked by the employers and the $21.51 demanded by the workers' group.

The nine members of the conference, composed of there employer representatives, three employe representatives and three representatives from the distinterested public, have met twice a week since September 16 in an attempt to arrive at a definite wage to recommend to the wage board for approval.

Both employer and employe groups have presented evidence. Representatives of the public last week decided on a definite minimum wage, but have refused to divulge the figure. It is believed to be approximately $17.50.

Business Men May Not Deduct Indirect Taxes

Taxes paid at the source of the commodity manufacture can not be deducted from returns in filing the business privilege tax, Corporation Counsel Elwood H. Seal announced yesterday.

Included in this category are the liquor dealers who have swamped the tax office with amended returns deducting the liquor tax from their gross receipts. They had been informed certain excise taxes, both Federal and District, were permissible for deduction.

It was feared that if this type of tax were permissible for exemption, revenue from privilege tax would fall short of expected collections.

In many cases, the deduction from the gross receipts as amended by the liquor dealers amounted to as high as 40 per cent.

Only those taxes paid by the consumer directly, such as amusement tax at theaters, are eligible for exemption, Seal stated.

Another tax which can be deducted from the gross receipts is the gasoline tax. In this case, the gasoline retailer is merely acting as a collection agent for the Government and should not be required to include the tax in his returns, it was stated.

For two weeks the privilege tax office has been handicapped in its influx of amended returns.

Petition Circulated.

The National Liberties Association yesterday began circulation of a petition demanding repeal of the business privilege tax in the District. The petition will be sent to Congress when it convenes. Dr. David Aitchison and Harold B. Mayer were named as a committee to manage the organized protest.

Poor 'Ginger' Faced Chilly Winter in Backyard Till Young Master Sought Aid of Boys Club, Turned Architect and Builder.

Even a dog's life is not complete without a place to live.

Don Carter, 13-year-old student at Powell Junior High School, and his dog Ginger, faced this problem two weeks ago, when Don's mother said Ginger would have to leave his quarters in their home at 1019 Otis street northwest.

It was no easy problem. Ginger could not be sent out to sleep in the yard in winter, after a year of security in Don's home.

Together Don and Ginger took their problem to J. H. Williams, supervisor of the Powell Boys Club. Next they conferred with R. H. Darby, instructor in the wood shop.

Out of the conference came the decision that Ginger must have a private house. Mostly it was Don's decision. He pulled out pencil and paper, sketched plans for a house, 18 inches wide, 2 feet long, with a private entrance just big enough for Ginger.

A second drawing gave details of construction, including a removable floor, and a sign over the door, "Ginger." The floor was designed by Don to permit easy cleaning of the house.

Don started construction during regular manual training hours, using scrap lumber supplied by the woodshop. Later joined the Boys Club so he could put in extra hours at night.

Last night the house was ready for Ginger's first inspection. One section of the roof remained unfinished. The floor was not in position. The question of paint was still unsettled.

But these details didn't bother Ginger.

From the doorway she looked up at Don. Ginger was ready to move in.

Ginger will have to wait, though, Don said, for several more days. He plans to shingle the roof, put windows in the house, and paint it white with red trimmings. The house will be placed either in the back yard or on the porch of Don's home.

Don's mother, who is co-operating in construction of the house, will furnish the final touch—the wooden letters to nail over the doorway and spell "Ginger."

Conduit Road Citizen Group Urges Income and Land Taxes

Division of District tax requirements between continuation of existing incidental taxes was recommended last night by the Conduit Road Citizens Association, meeting at Palisades Park Field House. Charles E. Rich, president, was in the chair.

Urging that the Federal Government return to the old 60-40 basis in meeting District expenditures and that present incidental taxes be continued, the association went on record in favor of dividing the remainder of the District's tax fund equally between a graduated tax on personal income derived in the District and taxation on assessed land values.

A resolution was adopted opposing the destruction of 166 trees in the Conduit road area threatened by the proposed erection of a transmission line to the Delecarlia waterworks. The association suggested that the line be laid underground.

Employment of District civil service workers in lower grades than those prescribed by their appointment was denounced in a resolution to be sent to the District Commissioners. The action was based on a report of the District Fire Fighters Association some months ago that 45 firemen were employed in clerical and other jobs.

Boycott of Japanese goods was recommended in another resolution.

New Test in D. C. For Sulfanilamide

Still in serious condition, but doing "as well as can be expected," Miss Janet Trenis probably will be placed on sulfanilamide treatment again today in her fight to conquer spinal meningitis.

Art Gallery For Children Opens Nov. 8

Representative Products of 2,000 From 4 to 14 to Be Hung.

The first gallery in the United States established for the exclusive display of children's works of art will be opened in the District WPA Professional Building, 816 Independence avenue southwest, on November 8, it was decided at an organization meeting of the committee of sponsors yesterday.

Mrs. L. Corrin Strong was chosen chairman of the committee, which besides raising the $20 per month required for upkeep of the project, is to assist in selecting the works of art to be displayed. Representative artistic products of the 2,000 children receiving instruction from WPA teachers in settlement and community houses throughout the District will be exhibited in the two-room museum. The artists range in age from 4 to 14.

Speakers at yesterday's meeting included: Russell C. Parr, regional director of the Federal Art Project; Miss Caroline Fleischner, assistant to regional director, WPA; Mrs. Mary Steele, director of the division of women's and professional projects, and William Dove, supervisor of the District Federal art project.

After the meeting, tea was served by students of the Household Workers Training Program, a WPA project.

In addition to Mrs. Strong, the following are members of the sponsors committee: Carl Mitman, curator of graphic arts, Smithsonian Institution; Dean Morris Crandall, George Washington University; Hugo Inden, Abbott School of Art; Mrs. Frances McClelland Mayfarth, of the Association of Childhood Education; Mrs. David Karrick, Miss Nancy Finch, Mrs. Harry January, Richard Lahey, principal, Corcoran School of Art; Eugene Weiss, vice principal, Corcoran School of Art; Rowland Lyon, Arts Club; William Jarvis, Arts Club, and Miss Virginia Price.

The museum was constructed with WPA labor and materials. Although other cities, including Boston, Detroit, Brooklyn and Duluth, possess museums of art, history and science for children, the Washington Children's Gallery is the only one to devote itself solely to the display of children's artistic efforts.

The museum has been highly praised by Commissioner J. W. Studebaker, of the Office of Education.

Man Found in Alley Held After Alarm

Called by a burglar alarm at the fur store of William Rosendorf, 1215 G street northwest, last night, police detained Allen Rouse, colored, of 1319 Eighth street northwest, whom they said they found in an areaway at the rear of the store.

Two rear windows had been opened, but the building had not been entered. Rouse, who said he was from South Carolina, was arrested by Policeman A. B. Nicholson, of No. 12 scout car.

A few minutes previous to the Rosendorf alarm, another alarm was sprung at Erlebacher's, 1210 F street, a block away. Investigation disclosed, however, that the signal was caused by the accidental opening of a transom.

Herbert Wilcox Has Picturized Reign of Queen Victoria With Profound Respect, Fine Authenticity and Flashing Pageantry; Premiere Date Changed; Great Magic Show Under Way; Theater Notes.

WHEN "Victoria the Great" is revealed for the first time in Washington at RKO-Keith's Theater next week, Capital theatergoers will discover perhaps the most deeply significant biographical film drama that ever has come out of Great Britain—a picture so obviously authentic in its investiture and so soundly respectful and adulatory in its depiction of the most glorious period in England's development of empire as to leave an indelible impression of both historical and romantic worth.

BELL.

The action of the film compresses the salient events of Queen Victoria's 60-year reign into a screen running time of a little less than two hours. In this restricted compass it combines the moving incidents that punctuated an idyllic love between a great sovereign and her princely consort with those affairs of state that stamped Victoria as very emphatically the ruler of her people, who dominated, but was not dominated by, her ministry.

It embraces, in the expanded and more detailed form of narrative made possible by the flexibility of the camera, the same span of years that formed the background of Gilbert Miller's stage production of "Victoria Regina" and utilizes many of the same illuminating episodes that were made a part of the series of vignettes of the life of Victoria that have served Helen Hayes so magnificently. This, of course, is not to imply the faintest shadow of imitation on the part of either. The source material of the content of both works necessarily is the same, substantially founded in historical fact.

The advantage that accrues to the Herbert Wilcox screen production in this regard rests in the complete co-operation of the British government enjoyed by England's foremost producer and director in the making of his distinguished contribution to the cinema's documentary record of a great nation's royalty, international relationships and the traditional pomp and pageantry of its monarchial processes and ceremonials.

Needless to say, "Victoria the Great" is a production that reflects an unwavering British point of view. There are passages of political pungency and bits of incidental humor that one fears may fall dead before American audiences, whereas in England, or the colonies, they inevitably must elicit quick and vehement response.

In contemplating the many superlative qualities of this utterly sincere labor of love at a personal Wednesday midnight preview, generously arranged by Manager Hardie Mealkin to solve the problem of an overloaded schedule, the persistent reaction was that Producer Wilcox has performed a world service at an opportune time. The deep-rooted perplexities that confronted Queen Victoria and the manner in which she met them are not without their close analogies in the present period of the world's unrest.

The sympathetic devotion to the task in hand exerted by the producer and his associates in fashioning "Victoria the Great" has been effectively communicated to the cast intrusted with the visualization of the great figures of modern English history. Ann Neagle, in the title role, discloses a vastly richer histrionic endowment than her earlier performances on the American screen have suggested and Anton Walbrook executes a finely drawn and adroitly repressed study of the Prince Consort. Among the notably capable players in the roles of prime importance are H. B. Warner and Mary Morris.

If these cursory remarks, preliminary to a more detailed review of the picture next week, give the impression that "Victoria the Great" is a history lesson, rather than an engrossing entertainment, that idea should be immediately dispelled. It is quite as much a great love story as it is a recital of British political and diplomatic achievements. There is charm, movement and drama in every scene of the play, set off by majestic music and frequently exciting climaxes. The final sequences are in Technicolor to lend a final fillip to the far-flung pageantry that characterizes the empire's occasions of state.

Thoughtful audiences will find a wealth of satisfying substance in "Victoria the Great" upon which to feast.

• • • •

By a late Tuesday decision of RKO-Radio's high command, the premiere of "Victoria the Great" in the National Capital has been advanced from Wednesday to Tuesday evening. The engagement of Joe E. Brown in "Fit for a King"—an especially apt preceding title—will be brought to a close with a final showing beginning at 4:39 p. m., Tuesday. The box-office then will be closed from 4:40 to 7:15, at which hour it will reopen for the "Victoria" inaugural. The picture will be presented twice only on Tuesday night, with both Anna Neagle, the star, and Herbert Wilcox, producer, making one—and possibly two—personal appearances. As this is written, the tentative plan is to introduce the distinguished visitors between projections of the picture at approximately 9:30 o'clock. Any deviation from this schedule will be made known at a later time. The regular daily showings of "Victoria the Great" will begin Wednesday morning on the theater's usual all-day schedule.

By another late decision of the local Warner Brothers executives, arrived at yesterday, "The Awful Truth," which has just completed a record week at the Earle Theater, will continue its downtown run on the screen at the Metropolitan, beginning today.

The popularity of Irene Dunne and Cary Grant and their supporting players in this hilariously contrived marital comedy is such as to justify continued showing of the film, even at the cost of supplanting Paul Muni's triumphant production of "The Life of Emile Zola."

With the memory of "The Awful Truth" still fresh, the Warner Brothers' production of "The Perfect Specimen," costarring Erol Flynn and Joan Blondell, opening today at the Earle, faces what is usually referred to as the supreme test. It had better be good!

• • • •

British prominence in the American theater does not end with "Victoria the Great." A wire from that veteran showman, Sam Weller, yesterday afternoon had this to say: "Maurice Evans in 'King Richard II' continues triumphant march through the East. Last night's receipts $5,995 for one performance in the Bushnell Auditorium, Hartford, Conn. Advance sale for New Haven engagement beginning tonight tremendous. Rochester Auditorium opening nearly sold out a week in advance." This is one of the more impressive offerings booked for the National Theater later in the season, in case it had slipped your mind.

• • • •

That will be quite a Magic Show at the Belasco Theater next week. What with all of the experts in pulling rabbits out of hats—none of them as yet has succeeded in pulling a hat out of a rabbit—who have regaled local audiences from time to time taking part, there should be enough black art on view from Monday night on to make you see spots before the eyes indefinitely.

It is by no means an amateur entertainment that is planned. All of the participants are old-time magicians who have appeared before audiences in a professional capacity times without number. Furthermore, the bill is to be staged and the box-office run by seasoned showmen. George Vivian, director of the National Academy of Stage Training, will stage the performance and the ticket sale is under the personal supervision of Stephen E. Cochran, continuously identified with the living theater in the National Capital for a period of 30 years.

Thirty years is quite a period out of any youngster's life.

Speaking of youngsters, those two rollicking young fellows, "Bill" Dolph, head man at Station WOL, and Dr. Frank T. Shyne, the ailing actor's best friend in times of remedial need, will combine forces as "kings for the day" at the "radio luncheon" scheduled by the Variety Club for 1 o'clock Monday in the Willard Hotel. The boys are preparing a special program, including a talk by a noted writer on "What Is Behind Today's War Headlines." The program will be further enlivened by the award of several door prizes. I don't need a door and I hope that by "radio luncheon" they don't mean we will be fed on air!

• • • •

Eternal-Unities Note.

The theme song for the day will be "Shyne on Harvest Moon," sung by the Doc—heaven forbid!

Enjoys Long-Run Record at Earle

Audrey Sieber, whose latest happy portrait study appears above, today is observing the completion of a continuous four-year tour of duty as mistress of ceremonies at the Warner Brothers' Earle Theater. During her 210 weeks of service Miss Sieber, whose costumes invariably reflect the smartest feminine modes, has introduced many of the most celebrated stars of stage, screen and radio to Earle audiences and has won high degree of popularity on boh sides of the footlights.

In Hollywood

With JIMMY FIDLER

Hollywood, Oct. 28.—A problem in calculus is a cinch compared to the problem screen stars must solve in giving to charity. Being in the limelight — and in the money—they are made-to-order targets for every charity campaign, legitimate or otherwise, that can be conceived by mortal man. And, nine times out of ten, they feel obliged to give until it hurts, for they know that nothing will damage them with the public more seriously than the charge that they are tightwads. They support the legitimate charities generously. One-half of 1 per cent of every dollar they earn goes automatically to the Actors Relief Fund. They donate thousands of dollars to the Community Chest and to church and fraternal campaigns. Most of them contribute large amounts to selected hospitals and public welfare institutions. And then their troubles begin.

JOAN BLONDELL.

It is amazing how many needy relatives fasten themselves like leeches onto the pocketbook of a famous star. And the star usually kicks through because those needy relatives have a habit of telling their woes to the world if he refuses. Charity racketeers organize "benefits" and invite the stars to buy a block of tickets. "Hundreds of people are interested in this benefit," they say, "and you wouldn't want those people to stay away from your pictures because you refused a small contribution to a great cause, would you?" The star usually buys. About 50 per cent of the average star's fan mail ends with a "give me" note. Most of it is phony, but stars are sympathetic and are often "touched."

Had lunch today with the editor of a fan magazine. At frequent intervals, his publication stages a contest and offers, as first prize, a free trip to Hollywood. Usually a screen test in one of the lesser studios is arranged as additional bait. My friend, the editor, says that his conscience is beginning to bother him—that he feels like a criminal whenever the publisher orders another contest. To date, the magazine has brought 26 girls to Filmville and of them only two have had common sense enough to discount Hollywood's glitter and go back home. The other 24 have stayed on in the city of their dreams. "I've tried to keep track of them," the editor told me. "Twenty-three have had a bad time of it. I hate to think of the messes that several got involved in. Only one made good—she married an in-the-money writer."

Dropped in at the Powell-Blondell menage this afternoon and found Joan, decked out in a pair of paint-smeared coveralls, "doing over" some garden furniture. Since years ago, she has redecorated everything but the nails in their house. Rooms have been enlarged and remodeled, new windows have been cut, furniture has been undressed and redressed. Some part of their home is always in a shambles. "Aren't you ever going to get through with all this?" I asked her—and she grinned happily. "Of course not," she laughed. "This house was designed by a mere man and it shrieked for a woman's loving care. The only reason I married Dick was to have a free hand at the reconstruction of it."

The Post's New Yorker

New York, Oct. 28.

A FEW MONTHS AGO the Internal Revenue examiners inspected the books of George Roosevelt, sr., for income-tax purposes and approved the return filed by the President's kin. Some weeks later he received a form letter from the tax department notifying him that he had failed to file a return—this, although they already had the return and had made a complete check-up. Roosevelt informed them of this fact, but the tax officials replied that they didn't have the return . . . Mr. Roosevelt became incensed. "In moments of stress and anger," was his final message to them, "we have been taught to resort to the Bible. Well, then, resort to the Bible—especially to the quotation, 'Seek and ye shall find!'"

The enthusiastic Mr. Clifford then rushed to the Savoy-Plaza, where he spoke to the management. "This Kerr fellow," he enthused, "is one you should hire right away. He's a marvelous entertainer" . . . "What does he do?" the manager asked . . . "He plays the piano and sings songs. Smart, risque songs, just like Dwight Fiske. In fact, he's a second Dwight Fiske" . . . I'm sorry," was the answer, "because right now—we're employing Dwight Fiske!"

PRESCOTT VAN WYCK will fail in his prosecution of a bigamy charge against his wife, Lolita Cordoba . . . To sustain a bigamy charge in this State, it is necessary to prove first a legal marriage. Van Wyck insists that Lolita legally was married to a young man in Scotland and didn't get a divorce. One of Lolita's defenses will be that this Scottish marriage was illegal, because it was contracted before the final divorce, from another previous groom, had become legal.

D.C. Realty Man Termed 'Ponzi' By Prosecutor

Attorney Arrives to Return Parmelee to Face Ohio Check Charges.

District Attorney Thomas J. O'Connor, of Lucas County, Ohio, arrived here yesterday to take William R. Parmelee, whom he described as a "post-depression Ponzi," back to Toledo to face six charges of "unlawfully drawing checks."

Parmelee, reported ill at his home on Glebe road, Livingston Heights, Arlington County, has indicated he would not waive extradition, but papers were issued last night by Gov. Martin L. Davey of Ohio.

Parmelee is president of the Toledo Guaranty Corporation and head of Parmelee, Inc., with offices in the Woodward Building here. He was arrested Wednesday.

Claims aggregating $500,000 have been filed against his corporation in bankruptcy proceedings pending in Toledo.

The Toledo Guaranty Corporation, O'Connor revealed, did a varied business which included the handling of financial claims and real estate developments.

In Washington the realty concern, known as Parmelee, Inc., ostensibly was engaged in the development of the Henderson farm, a tract of several hundred acres on Lee boulevard, near East Falls Church.

Parmelee's financial empire sprang, O'Connor said, from 1932 until this year, when Parmelee's interests claimed more than $800,000 assets.

The checks which led to the warrants were issued from Toledo to a bank in Parsons, W. Va., site of the lumber operation.

When returned, Parmelee probably will be charged with violation of the Ohio "Blue Sky" laws as well as the check counts, which may increase, O'Connor said.

Milk Strike Leader Condemns Violence

Utica, N. Y., Oct. 28 (AP).—Reports of minor violence in scattered upState New York counties brought today from Archie Wright, organizer of the Dairy Farmers Union, an admonition to all milk farmers on strike to "stop unnecessary violence."

"This strike movement is spreading like wildfire," Wright commented after scanning first day reports of the walk-out called against all dealers supplying fluid milk to the metropolitan market.

In New York City, Health Commissioner John L. Rice predicted the city will feel no great stoppage of milk while the strike is at its present strength.

Trip to Capital Is Alibi In Murder-Arson Trial

Media, Pa., Oct. 28 (AP).—Albert R. Knight, 56-year-old former oil company official, rested his defense in Delaware County court today to a charge that he attempted to burn down his home last May and murder his children to collect $120,000 insurance on their lives.

His defense was based on testimony that he was returning from Washington, D. C., at the time of the fire and that kerosene-soaked papers and oakum found by firemen in the cellar of his home at the time of the fire, he had placed there to prevent the migration of insects.

Woman Who Accused Clark Gable Is Freed

San Francisco, Oct. 28 (AP).—The Englishwoman who accused Clark Gable of being the father of her daughter won an appeal today against her conviction of mail fraud on the ground she should have been charged with extortion, if anything. Morris Lavine, attorney for plump middle-aged Mrs. Violet Wells Norton predicted the Government would "drop the whole matter" as a result of the decision by the Federal Court of Appeals.

Rumanians Here and Abroad Will Fete Birthday of Marie

QUEEN MARIE.

In Washington the flag will fly from the Rumanian Legation today and, 5,000 miles away in the Balkans, 17,000,000 subjects will pay honor to Marie Queen Mother of Rumania, on her sixty-second birthday.

Queen Marie, who has been described as the most beautiful and versatile queen in the world, looks far younger than her years and says she expects to live to be 100.

Mother of Carol, Rumania's present monarch and granddaughter of Queen Victoria, Marie is related by blood or marriage to almost all the royalty of Europe. The late King George V was her cousin, as is the former Kaiser Wilhelm, of Germany.

Married to the Crown Prince of Rumania at the age of 17, she became queen consort in 1914 and on several occasions during the last two decades has exercised an important influence on Rumanian policy. Marie's English origin and inclinations are considered to have been an important factor in Rumania's decision to side with the Allies in the World War.

Eight years after the war, Marie made her famous tour of America which soon lost the lustre of a triumphal procession through mismanagement and friction among her publicity advisers. The trip included a stop in Washington and reception at the White House by President and Mrs. Calvin Coolidge.

After the death of her husband in 1927 and the return of her exiled son, Carol to Rumania in 1930, Queen Marie played a less important role in Rumanian politics and devoted increasing time to her numerous cultural interests.

An accomplished writer, Queen Marie is the author of a number of fairy stories written for her children as well as a moving account of Rumania's war-time ordeal, "My Country and My People," and her own autobiography.

She speaks English, French, German, Rumanian and some Russian and takes a keen interest in painting and music.

Unitarians Request Pastors to Expose Industrial Wrongs

Niagara Falls, N. Y., Oct. 28 (AP).—The general conference of the American Unitarian Association urged Unitarian ministers today to inform their congregations of any violations of "fair play" in the relations of capital and labor.

The 400 delegates approved a resolution which said:

"We recognize that labor's growing power, confirmed by recent decisions of the Supreme Court, brings with it commensurate responsibility.

"We also recognize the obligation of capital to meet issues in the spirit of fair play.

"We call upon our churches to exercise their efforts of leadership to these ends and that painstaking efforts be taken by our ministers to bring to the attention of their people and their communities any violation of this spirit and this obligation."

John Lewis Urges Control of Science

Boston, Oct. 28 (AP).—John L. Lewis, C. I. O. chairman, writing in the current issue of the Tech Engineering News asserts that "undirected and uncontrolled, the amazing progress of the industrial arts may create such widespread displacement of labor as to endanger our whole social system."

Writing in the student publication of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, he says, "we cannot dispense with the gifts of technology without giving up hope of a constantly improving way of life for the vast majority of our people."

"There must be a strengthening of labor unions to the point where the workers in every major industry are organized units, capable of defending themselves against injustice, but also capable of lending their assistance in the efforts to solve the problems of industry.

Hour's Parade To Pass Stand On Halloween

The order of march for the Halloween parade tomorrow evening, released yesterday by the Board of Trade committee in charge of the event, reveals that eight sections, led by the Halloween Queen and her court, will move off at 7:30 p. m. from Constitution avenue and Fourth street, passing the reviewing stand on the north side of Constitution avenue near Fifteenth and finally disbanding in the Ellipse.

It will take the parade an hour to pass the reviewing stand. Eighteen floats have been entered in the cavalcade, according to Harry P. Somerville, chairman of general arrangements.

An elaborate floor show has been arranged for the fifth anual bal masque to be given by Washington Post of Jewish War Veterans in the Jewish Community Center. The purpose of the masque is to raise funds to combat anti-Semitic propaganda and to meet expenses of the post's participation in civic activities.

Several hundred couples are expected to attend the Halloween party at 9 p. m. tomorrow in the new Interior Building. The affair is sponsored by the Interior Department Recreation Association.

The Washington Boys' Club and the Newman Club of George Washingtin University are among the other organizations planning events.

Faithful Canine Guide Mourns Her Master, Blind John Davis

Alert Fanny, Trained to Lead Through Capital's Traffic Maze, Soon to Provide 'Eyes' for Another.

Fanny, a German shepherd dog, was disconsolate yesterday because she could no longer guide John Davis through the Washington traffic maze. John Davis, her blind master, is dead.

Until Tuesday, when Mr. Davis died of a cerebral hemorrhage, Fanny was a career dog with an important job in life. Her role was to lead John Davis safely along pedestrian-cluttered sidewalks and across streets that held a threat of danger in every motor car.

Fanny is out of a job now. But she doesn't have to worry about another because there are few dogs that can be a "seeing-eye" to their masters.

John Davis trained Fanny. He trained her after he had been slowly blinded from the effects of an explosion in a powder factory at Wilmington, Del. His eyes had been bad even before that. At the outbreak of the war he was refused enlistment in the Army because of color blindness.

Besides Fanny, Mr. Davis trained several dogs for the late blind Senator Schall, of Minnesota. Mr. Davis, who was 53 and was born in Martinsburg, W. Va., made his living soliciting orders for articles made by the blind.

Surviving him are three sisters, Mrs. Jesse Nicholson, of Chevy Chase, Md.; Mrs. Bertha Rodrick and Mrs. Forest Valin, both of Washington, and two brothers, who live in New York.

Fanny, whose master was buried in Rock Creek Cemetery yesterday, is being kept now at Mrs. Nicholson's home. She plans to give her to a local charitable organization to be turned over to a blind person.

U. S. Opens Bids On Final Stretch Of Skyline Drive

By the Associated Press.

Bids for construction of the southernmost link in picturesque Skyline Drive, along the crest of the mountains in Shenandoah National Park, were opened yesterday by the Bureau of Public Roads.

The link of 9.389 miles will connect Black Rock Gap and Jarmans Gap, southern limit of the park, where the Skyline Drive connects with the Blue Ridge parkway. When completed, the Skyline Drive and the parkway combined will afford a scenic drive of more than 500 miles along the crest of the Blue Ridge.

Officials of the National Park Service, sponsor of the two projects, estimated today expenditures on the Skyline Drive to date at approximately $4,350,000.

Albert Brothers Construction Co., Inc., of Salem, Va., was low bidder with $287,203.50.

Dance Creators.

Eleanor Powell and her pianist, Chris Schonberg, are now engaged in writing the lyrics and music for the star's new dance, "Chuck-a-Boom." Created by Miss Powell, the dance will not be included in her new musical, "Rosalie." Instead, she originated it for use in ballrooms for the college crowds.

Woman Hits Self With Brick, Falls On Rails—Saved!

Miss Clark had hit herself in the head with a brick, police said, and collapsed on a spur track across Wilke street, Alexandria.

Police said she wrote a note, saying she intended to stun herself and take her own life. She pinned the note to her dress.

A colored man saw her lying on the rails and telephoned police. They arrived in a scout car a scant few minutes before a switch engine was due. Physicians said Miss Clark's condition was not serious.

Parties to Combat Vandalism Urged

Churches and welfare agencies were urged to increase their Halloween activities as a means to prevent expensive vandalism, at a meeting of the Northeast Neighborhood Council last night.

Capt. Richard Mansfield, of the Ninth Police Precinct, spoke on the greater cost of protecting property in sections where children lack recreation centers.

In 1900 he graduated from the University of Virginia School of Medicine and afterward returned to Fredericksburg to practice. He was a kinsman of the Chewnings who owned the farm site of the Battle of the Wilderness.

He held a warrant as a non-commissioned officer in the United States Army medical corps for a number of years, and was also active in the Virginia National Guard. In 1917 he volunteered and served during the war as a first lieutenant in the medical corps.

Duce Asks Allies Return Reich's African Empire

Peace Is Goal of Fascism But Reds Must Go, Mussolini Says.

By the Associated Press.

Rome, Oct. 28.—Premier Mussolini today celebrated the fifteenth anniversary of fascism's rise to power with an open declaration for treaty revision that would give back Germany the African colonies stripped from her at the end of the World War.

"Peace!" Mussolini declared, was the watchword for the sixteenth year of Fascist power. But he added:

"For a durable and fruitful peace, it is necessary that bolshevism be eliminated in Europe, starting with Spain. It is necessary that some clauses of the peace treaties be revised.

"It is necessary that a great people—the German people—have once more the place to which they are entitled and which they once possessed in the African sun."

Clearly Supports Reich.

The speech at Mussoloni Forum, in celebration of the fifteenth anniversary of the historic Fascist march on Rome, was the first time Mussolini clearly and openly had thrown his weight behind Reichsfuehrer Hitler's renewed struggle for colonial possessions for Germany.

(Hitler first demanded return of Germany's colonies at the Nazi Party conference at Nurnberg in 1936 Concentrated in Africa and the western Pacific, they form an area six times greater than the present Germany in Europe.

(The African colonies to which Mussolini referred are now governed under League of Nations mandates by Great Britain, France, Belgium and the Union of South Africa, and are German East Africa, German Southwest Africa, the Cameroons and Togoland.)

Nazi Delegation Present.

More than 100,000 Blackshirt leaders heard Mussolini make what Fascist commentators said was the announcement to the world of his program for the coming year. A German delegation led by Rudolf Hess, German minister without portfolio and Hitler's personal representative, was present.

"Heil, der Fuehrer!" the assembled Blackshirts shouted in German as the Nazi delegation marched into Mussolini Forum. Since Monday night the fascist leaders had been moving on Rome by truck and train in a symbolic re-enactment of the march on Rome 15 years ago.

Diplomats interpreted Mussolini's espousal of German colonial demands as the result of an agreement reached during his recent state visit to Germany by which Italy and Germany would march hand in hand in colonial matters.

Fascist Position Crystallized.

Diplomats said they believed one object of the flying visit Joachim von Ribbentrop, German Ambassador to London, made to Rome October 22 was to ask Mussolini to back Hitler's new drive for colonies.

"The Fascist position regarding the German colonial question is now crystallized," one diplomat said. "The cards are now on the table."

"Comrades," Mussolini asked, "with what watchword shall we begin the sixteenth year of Fascist power? Let it be the simple word, peace!

"Use and abuse of that word has been made in the bleating sheepfolds of the so-called great democracies, but when we pronounce this word, we who have fought and are ready to fight again, it regains its profound, solemn and human meaning."

He described the Italians as a rejuvenated people "with which it would be extremely dangerous for anyone to cross arms."

Indecent Assault Laid to Student, 17

One charge of indecent assault was placed against a 17-year-old student yesterday after two victims of attacks failed to identify him. He was later released on $1,000 bond.

The youth was arrested Tuesday night by Precinct Detective George E. Thornton on the complaint of Bettie Holmes, 20, 411 Franklin street northeast, who reported to police the youth assaulted her at Fourth and Bryant streets northeast, October 11.

The youth was questioned in the week-old attack on Nancy Lee Summers, 18-year-old business college student, but exonerated when Miss Summers failed to recognize him. The arrested man does not tally with descriptions of the man who attacked Ruth MacMillan, George Washington University co-ed, in Rock Creek Park early this month, police said.

Widow Gets Most Of Warburg Estate

New York, Oct. 28 (AP).—Felix M. Warburg, the financier and philanthropist, contributed approximately $13,000,000 to philanthropic causes the last 15 years of his life and because of these donations left only $107,000 to charitable and educational enterprises in his will filed today. He died October 20.

The largest charitable bequest in the will was $50,000 for support of Jewish philanthropic societies of New York. He left his personal property and real estate to his widow.

Arizonans Adither Here Over Choice Of Cactus Queen

The Capital's Arizona State Society is pretty irate because almost every State except theirs has chosen a couple of dozen queens of this and that. Amid all the petroleum, custard pie, coconut and etcetera rulers of sister commonwealths, Arizona stands alone and queenless.

So next Friday at the Continental Hotel the society is holding a dance in the middle of which will be picked a queen, one to represent that famed western fruit the cactus. Dix W. Price, president of the organization, would like to hear from would-be rulers from Arizona. He can be found in Senator Ashurst's office.

French Charge Italy Is Inciting Islam to Revolt

Virtual Martial Law Invoked; Troops Quell Riots in Morocco.

Port Lyautey and Fez. Hundreds of troops patrolled the native quarters and arrested a score of nationalist leaders.

Several nationalists seized in Sale were sentenced immediately to long prison terms.

Troop reinforcements, including units of France's famed Foreign Legion and detachments of Senegalese Tirailleurs were moved into the cities to reinforce police and mobile guards.

It was reported from Rabat that Mohammed Diouri, Arab nationalist chief, arrested yesterday for leading a mob against the police in Port Lyautey, had been proven to be in the pay of a "European power." He was sentenced to two years in prison.

The rioting in Port Lyautey at one time involved 2,000 natives, 4 of whom were killed, a score injured and 30 arrested.

The situation in Sale was said to be tense and the native corps of police was reinforced by foreign legionnaires.

Woman Is Seized For Poisoning of Mate, 2 Children

St. Helens, Oreg., Oct. 28 (AP).—Twice-married Agnes Joan Ledford, 35, professed innocence behind jail bars today while officers investigated strange deaths of her two stepdaughters and her first husband.

District Attorney David Bennett said he had traced a purchase of poison to Mrs. Ledford; that some of the lethal substance was found in her home and that the equivalent of the amount missing from the purchase was discovered in the stomachs of the dead children. The death of Dorothy, 15, and Ruth Ledford, 13, last month had been ascribed to eating spray-poisoned fruit.

The death in Portland in 1932 of Mrs. Ledford's first husband, John Matson, was being investigated. Matson's body was exhumed and police said a trace of poison had been found.

Hatchet Slayer Enters Guilty Plea

After 11 members of the jury which was to try him on a murder charge had been drawn yesterday at Upper Marlboro, Md., George Hill, colored, 45, through his attorney, Senator Lansdale C. Sasscer, entered a plea of guilty of manslaughter. He was remanded to the county jail to await sentence.

Hill was charged with the hatchet slaying of Sarah Jackson, his common-law wife, last September 19, at their home in Fairmont Heights, Md.

The court accepted the change of plea after State's Attorney Alan Bowie had concurred in the defense attorney's request.

Taking the stand to relate the circumstances surrounding the crime, Hill said the Jackson woman attacked him with an ax and that in the scuffle he hit her with a hatchet.

Norway's Foreign Chief, Roosevelt Confer Today

Dr. Halvdan Koht, visiting Norwegian Minister of Foreign Affairs, continued "informal talks" with Secretary Hull and other State Department officials at a luncheon in his honor yesterday.

The diplomat arrived in Washington Tuesday to "discuss several international questions," chiefly the possibility of a new trade treaty.

Returning to New York late yesterday, he will motor to Hyde Park today to have lunch with President and Mrs. Roosevelt.

Russia Withdraws Aid.

London, Oct. 28 (U.P.).—Soviet Russia, angered by the failure of international efforts to curb Fascist intervention in the Spanish civil war, has withdrawn her financial support of the neutrality control scheme designed to "quarantine" the conflict, it was disclosed tonight.

The Russians insist, however, that they will fight to retain their seat in the nine-nation committee of the nonintervention group that will meet again tomorrow in an effort to find a means of withdrawing all foreign "volunteers" from the Spanish battlefronts.

Flood Drives Out Loyalists.

Hendaye, Franco-Spanish Frontier, Oct. 28 (AP).—Flood waters of the Gallego and Ebro Rivers today halted military operations in northeast Spain where the insurgent armies are attempting to end the civil war by cutting Valencia from Barcelona.

Military dispatches said government defenders had been forced to evacuate their trenches in the Pina Ozera zone, southeast of Zaragoza, where intense artillery and infantry battles have been fought on the southern flank of the 100-mile front.

Duce's Envoy to Paris May Quit

Paris, Oct. 28 (U.P.).—The Italian Ambassador to Paris, Vittorio Cerutti, may quit his post because of Premier Mussolini's dissatisfaction with the French government delay in recognizing his Ethiopian conquest, it was reported tonight.

France, like Great Britain, has not yet recognized Italy's Ethiopian conquest and supposedly is using such recognition as a "bargaining point" for the negotiations in connection with the Spanish crisis and Mediterranean situation.

Basque Plot Uncovered.

Hendaye, Franco-Spanish Frontier, Oct. 28 (U.P.).—Spanish insurgent authorities, reporting that they had uncovered a Basque uprising plot, tonight ordered the population of Viscaya Province to surrender all arms within 48 hours or face death before firing squads.

Nazi Answers Critics by Citing Situation in U.S.

By the Associated Press.

Berlin, Oct. 28.—Dr. Alfred Rosenberg, chief of the Nazi party's foreign political department, gave a sharp rejoinder tonight to what he construed as criticism of the Third Reich in the United States.

"If, owing to misconception of the situation in the U. S. A. and Germany, speeches about civilization and denunciation of authoritary systems of government reach our ears, we cannot but reply that before such attacks are made against authoritary states one ought first to look after ten to twelve million unemployed and try to determine why, through rapacious despoiling of the soil, 8,000,000 farmers are slowly dying and desert is expanding appallingly.

"We are firmly convinced that on account of the methods employed by Germany already many things seem to us mastered which have not even been recognized as a problem by those who think they must constantly teach us.

"Germany, according to our opinion, has proceeded along paths which other nations will also have to follow in order to overcome the economic middle ages."

MARY HAWORTH'S MAIL

Having Preferred Books to People Until Now, Girl of 15 Finds Self Lonely, Wanting Friends.

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: Will you please help me overcome my trouble? I am sure you can. I am 15 years old. All my life I have kept to myself, liking books more than most people. As a result, now that I have wakened to the realization that you must have friends to be happy, I am lonesome. For I have no close friends. I am never asked to parties, or anywhere else, for that matter. I want to make friends, but I don't know how. I am afraid of people—even those my own age; afraid of what they say and think of me and afraid to do anything before a group because I might make a mistake.

• • • •

I try to get as far away from the spotlight as possible, and yet I don't want to be forgotten. People seem to think of me in a lukewarm fashion, if at all. I never know the right or witty thing to say when spoken to. I can't carry on the simplest conversation. I am too serious; don't know to have a good time like the others. I know I have no personality—for some people have almost told me so outright.

• • • •

I am what older people call "ladylike." This gets me nowhere with girls of my own age. In a school where they think more of boys and dates that they do of lessons, I am out of place. I've never had a desire to get a boy friend. The way some girls go after them makes me sick. Besides, it's girl friends I want. But they ignore me. It isn't a bad disposition that is my trouble—for I can take and do things that are almost unbearable. They don't seem to dislike me; just don't notice me. I am really willing to do anything you tell me. Sincerely yours, FIFTEEN.

• • • •

Road to Popularity.

DEAR FIFTEEN: Your social education has been sorely neglected. But since you have the intelligence to enjoy the companionship of books, you should be able to overcome this handicap with a year's diligent effort. You need to learn how to play the social games at which accomplished teen-age girls excel today. Since you lack that spontaneous magnetism and self-assurance which compels friendships on the strength of sheer personality alone, I advise you to stop fretting about the fact that girls don't gravitate to you, stop trying to worm your way into their good graces by meek and dogged endurance of slights, and to focus all your energies on acquiring an impressive repertory of social talents. With these to back you up, the younger set will take you in, never fear.

• • • •

You need to learn ballroom dancing, so that you can float through the newest, most intricate steps, with the grace and lightness of a feather. You need some impudent, flippant accomplishment, such as tap-dancing—the very doing of which will fill your own self with a sense of gay and reckless abandon. You need to learn to swim—and to dive!—really well. You need to learn how to whack a tennis ball into place with vigorous, even venomous, assurance.

• • • •

You—with your present handicap of fearing the spotlight; of forlorn conviction that you cannot say the right or witty thing—need to compensate for that by looking so beautiful, or so pretty, or so chic, so distinctive in some way that is altogether and picturesquely and pleasingly your own, that you won't need to say anything devastating in order to win approval and be greeted and presented on all sides with gleeful pride. When you know that, in looks at least, you are the equal, if not superior, of every girl you know, you will not need to fear the spotlight, and you just won't fear it. If your voice is nicely cultivated as to enunciation, and your manner is a happy combination of assurance and pleasant interest in others, you won't need to say much more than "I see" and "Oh, yes," and "But, of course," in order to hold up your end of a conversation. You might even win a reputation for being so understanding, or so sympathetic, or so restful, just by virtue of not talking at top speed, without taking breath for punctuation, most of the time.

• • • •

So get busy, Fifteen. In a year you can be well on your way to making whatever friends you want, and in two years you can be the life of the party and the belle of the ball if you get yourself high-heartedly to the task of being just that. A famous actress has said that beauty in a woman begins with an inner conviction of loveliness. Another has said that charm consists, simply, in listening with your eyes and hearing with your heart. Magnetism is a matter of radiant, overflowing physical vitality, of being physically altogether fit, and enjoying every moment of everything you do, so that your enjoyment communicates itself to everyone within visual range.

• • • •

Your campaign for popularity must begin at home. In other words, you must persuade your parents to finance dancing, swimming and other lessons. You must develop clothes sense, style and chic, by reading the best fashion magazines which cater to teen-age girls' wardrobe needs, and by studying the effects of the best-dressed girls in your circle of student associates. You've got to "know your type," and do your hair and train your eyebrows and select and apply your cosmetics accordingly. You've got to dawn on other peoples' eyes as a girl who's a treat to look at. And it wouldn't be a bad idea—indeed, I think it would be an excellent idea—to cast out your net for a boy friend.

• • • •

Even if you're not much interested in boys, still it's an inescapably normal and wholesome part of youthful development to live on terms of casual camaraderie with the opposite sex, and nothing makes the other girls sit up and take notice like Jane's getting a beau. Little plain Jane, you know, whom they'd never dreamed had it in her. If the other girls have beaux or boy friends, you've got to have them, too, if you expect to talk their language. Popular teen-age girls, whose conversation is mostly made of up of confidences concerning what "I said" and "he said," and "what we did last night," and "what we're going to do next week," and whose bosom friendships with other girls are usually built on a beau-ing basis, just naturally pass over—without seeing—the girl who hasn't got, and apparently wouldn't know how to get a beau.

• • • •

Incidentally, stiffen up your backbone and don't be anybody's doormat. That's not the way to win friends. Nobody respects you for suffering yourself to be walked over. Don't go on "taking things and enduring things that are almost unbearable." That must mean that you lead with your chin for slights. Probably you go cowering up to groups with whom you haven't a single interest in common, try to put in a mouse-like two cents' worth anyway, and get completely ignored or maybe directly snubbed for your efforts. Without becoming a hermit, stick your chin up and go serenely on your own way until you have effected the metamorphosis of appearance, skills and genuine assurance suggested above—and then approach persons as an equal, not overly concerned with nor unduly dependent upon their favorable reaction. If you find you still can't make the grade socially with your erstwhile associates—don't hesitate to change schools. Any good educator would back you up in such a move, for such a sound and sensible and worthwhile purpose.

Evening Coronet of Lace and Ostrich

By Ethel Ehlen.
The Post Fashion Editor.

THIS is a season, say designers, when to go unhatted is not to be well-grommed, whether the occasion be daytime or formal evening. Consequqently, numerous and unique methods of adorning the head to accompany evening clothes are appearing. There are tiny calots of velvet and other rich materials, completely covered with wide and long flowing veils; calots of simulated jewels to add a glittering topping to evening gowns of classic simplicity. Dramatic evening chapeau of regal inspiration, and large affairs emulating hats worn in the gay nineties, are much in evidence. An outstanding head-dress for evening designed by Lilly Dache is shown above, the shape suggesting a coronet. The body of the hat is of stiffened black lace, with cerise and violet ostrich feathers curling over the top. The feather motif is repeated in the veil, which has ostrich pompoms scattered over the mesh.

Diet Experiments Are Pastime for Hollywood Beauties

A Hollywood pastime is finding exactly the right kind of diet for oneself. Glenda Farrell says she tried five different recommended diets until she discovered that whenever she became a pound overweight the solution was to eat carrots. She can lose a pound by sticking to this diet two days. Since she weighs herself daily, she never has more than a pound to take off.

Anne Nagel never has to worry about the weight situation, if she avoids eating when tired. Her reaction is that because food cannot be properly digested when one is fatigued it becomes fat. After a hard day's work at the studio, she drinks a quart of milk instead of eating solid food and her weight remains stationary.

Marcia Ralston retains Venus-like measurements by what seems almost a magic rite. Each morning, before breakfast, she combines the juice of one medium-sized lemon with one tablespoon of honey, and swallows it. She doesn't know why it keeps her weight down, because it does not curb her appetite, but it also keeps her complexion clear and glowing.

A WOMAN'S NEW YORK

By Alice Hughes

New York, Oct. 28.

NOTHING gives me greater joy than to escape from the deadly round of gaping (or yawning) at new clothes and visit some other sort of show. And so I happily charged into the National Business show here a few days ago, coming to look and remaining to be startled. Such goings-on!

ALICE HUGHES.

You'd never believe what new gadgets and widgets were displayed to lighten the lots of that huge and ever-fascinating race, the Office Girls. Actually, I think I saw everything but a machine which automatically Sasses The Boss in a disguised voice. Probably the dingus which will please the darlings most is a newly designed chair, adapted from a railway seat, which is said to combat that national menace and occupational disease known as "office hips" or "stenographers' spread."

Other Helps for the Office Wife I noted were 15-foot elastic telephone cords, long enough to permit a game of tag around the boss' desk, or to snap the phone at him if he gets fresh, and probably crack his thick skull. There was a typewriter that automatically exes-out mistakes, and baby, could I use one of those, for it is a foul lie to say that the capital "I" is the letter most frequently used by columnists. Any writer will tell you that "X" is the keyboard's busiest spot. Pens that do 150 words with one dip, lightning letter-openers and transparent adding machines also popped my clothes-weary eyes dangerously.

And who should I find in charge of the class in business-machine operation but another daughter of the fine old State of Arkansas, Eleanor Rankin. She has come all the way from those thar hills as a brilliant expert in these matters and teaches our flip, fly little secretaries how to do their mysterious stuff. A great show, ladies, but puzzling to a mere style-starer and shop-gadder!

GIRL ABOUT TOWN—Grace Moore, the Tennessee Thrush, turned up here the other morning in the midst of a heavy fall rainstorm. La Moore tells me that she is fed to the bicuspids with Hollywood at the moment, and is happy at the prospect of turning loose her high notes at the Metropolitan and in concert here and there. But Gracie will be back in the flicker factories again—for the heavy sugar still grows wild out yonder.

• • • •

The Barter Theater of Abingdon, Va., turned up here to play "Macbeth" the other day, which gave our leading smarties a prime chance to go comical. Some of the mad wags brought these objects to trade for a ticket to the show—an excited baby nannygoat, a live goose, very calm and bored; two hams (not actors, but from pig), and a jug of cider (sweet, not sour). Oh, dearies, it was such fun—I suppose. . . .

Cholly Knickerbocker, our ace society chatterer, tells me that Ina Claire and Clifton Webb are the only two troupers really accepted socially by local swells. But I said why Cholly old gadabout, how about Fred Astaire, once an Austerlitz of Omaha and now the boy-friend of the Whitneys and the only actor member of the holy Racquet and Tennis Club, and how about his sister Adele, who is Lady Cholly Cavendish of Mayfair, Ireland and way-points? I fawncy I had Cholly there! . . .

All our lovers of perfect sinking of sad, sweet German sonks fought their way into our Town Hall night before last to hear Richard Tauber, the German tenor whose lieder-singing is about tops. It is his first local stopover in six years, and he brought his new wife along—beauteous British actress, Dina Napier, and what a high-class name that is! A novelist should have thought it up first!

Oh well, that grub-worshipping outfit of ours, the Gourmet Society, has begun its season of food-idolatry for the winter. Its first service was held at Ridgefield, Conn., for a dinner typical of that fine old State, including baby turkey, steamed raisins and chestnuts, and pumpkin pie. No smoking during the meal, and all these precious fanatics must tie their napkins under their chins. The food's fine, but all this palate-dandling makes me howl.

2 beaten eggs
1 cup shortening
2 cakes of yeast
¼ cup of lukewarm water
7 cups of flour

Add yeast to lukewarm water and set aside until dissolved. Mix scalded milk, sugar, salt, and melted shortening. Add beaten eggs and potatoes. When lukewarm, add the yeast. Add three cups of flour and beat for five minutes. Stir in gradually the remaining flour. The dough should be rather soft and sticky. Place in a greased bowl, cover with waxed paper and place in refrigerator until ready to use. About on hour before rolls are to be baked, remove from refrigerator and make out into rolls. Bake twenty minutes at 425 degrees.

Today's HEALTH TALK

By Logan Clendening, M. D.

Vitamin A Aids Eyes.

David Livingstone, the explorer, called Africa "The Dark Continent." There is just as much sunshine in Africa as any place else, so it is not clear exactly why he gave it this designaion. One reason may have been that he found so many cases of eye disease among the natives.

There were two kinds of opthalmia, which he found—one due to trachoma, probably a germ disease, and the other due to lack of vitamin A in the diet.

The condition is probably not common among your friends or the children of your friends, but wait until you have a nice war and you will probably find it. In 1907 Block, in Copenhagen, discovered dozens of cases among babies due to war conditions. Milk products were being exported to Germany, with the result that the Danish babies were not fed properly, so they developed this eye disease. To this day in India, the most frequent cause of blindness in children is due to inadequate diet, lacking in vitamin A.

Another condition which is probably due to lack of vitamin A is night blindness, which, as its name implies, is inability to see in a dim light. This has been known for a long time, ever since the days of the Father of Medicine, Hippocrates, who described it, and added as an extremely modern note that feeding ox liver would cure it.

We know a great deal about the chemistry and physiology of vitamin A. Vitamin A occurs in two slightly different forms in nature. In animals it occurs as a colorless substance, soluble in fats. It is present in cod liver oil and other animal oils. In the vegetable kingdom it is known as carotene, which is the yellow coloring matter of carrots and many other natural foodstuffs, and is also generally accompanied by greenness, that most green plants are rich in vitamin A activity, such as spinach, cabbage, lettuce, brussels sprouts and green peas.

When these vegetable provitamins are ingested, they are converted into vitamin A, and while slightly different in chemical structure, and in spite of the fact that to the naked eye they appear colorless, they still retain some of the yellowness and, in fact, a chemical test for vitamin A consists in determining its yellow color.

The human body does not easily run out of vitamin A. Under ordinarily circumstances we eat more of it than we need, and this excess is stored in liver. That is true of all animals, and that is why Hippocrates was able to cure night blindness by feeding ox liver.

In animal experiments, however, in which vitamin A is carefully removed from the diet, not only eye infections, but weakness and infections of various kinds are the rule.

The pamphlets are: "Three Weeks' Reducing Diet," "Indigestion and Constipation," "Reducing and Gaining," "Infant Feeding," "Instructions for the Treatment of Diabetes," "Feminine Hygiene" and "The Care of the Hair and Skin."

Successful Model Analyzes Herself

If you would be a successful model, analyze yourself for the following qualities that are set forth by Walter Thornton, who supplies models for America's best known painters, photographers and advertisers.

These qualities are: A face harmoniously constructed, regardless of shape; large dark eyes set far apart; thick, wavy lustrous hair; perfect teeth; a nose that is regular but inconspicuous; full lips, the ability to act—that is, register every human emotion.

Enumerating the dimensions of the ideal model in an article in the current Saturday Evening Post, Thornton adds, "hands, surprisingly enough, are frequently as important as legs to artists of the brush and lens alike."

PLEASANT HOMES

By Elizabeth MacRae Boykin.

WE'RE just as down on junk and trinkets as anybody. Maybe more so. But we do think that the right accessories can "make" a room just as they make a costume.

It's a good idea every few seasons to clear all the ornaments out of the room and rearrange them. This will give the room an unexpectedly refreshed look and at the same time will be the occasion for a weeding out of extra oddments that may have been stuck around for no reason.

This will be a Chinese season in decorative accessories. Partly because our classic period in decorative design—the eighteenth century—was inspired by the China trade, and so Chinese lamps, porcelains and bibelots fit in beautifully with furniture and fabrics of eighteenth century tradition. And since the Japanese home remains the most perfect interpretation of modern decoration, there are few details more pleasantly suitable for accent in a modern room than well chosen Japanese prints or ornaments.

Another important accessory fashion for interiors this season comes from Lenci, the famous Italian designer of dolls. Remember those perfectly lovely felt dolls with faces as sweet and puckish as those of real babies? Naturally the artist who could create them could be relied on to do some outstanding things in ceramics and glass. Watch through the coming months for Lenci porcelain madonnas—they're exquisite for mantel or chest, especially the white and heaven-blue ones.

For the informal room, you'll be encountering many delightful bits of Mexican pottery, tin, wood and glass. From the mountains of the deep South also come accessories that will be finding places in informal rooms. Earthenware jugs and pottery, primitive hammered pewter, bright basketry, fabrics and wood carvings all have spontaneity and a hearty freshness for the maple room.

YOUR FIGURE, MADAME!

Exercise, Good Posture Combined Will Keep Figure Trim.

By Ida Jean Kain.

"WHEN A woman loses her figure she seems to grow old twice as quickly" . . . and that is the candid opinion of Gelett Burgess in his sparkling new book, "Look Eleven Years Younger."

Mr. Burgess does not believe in exercise. It is his contention that posture should be so erect and so perfect that you make constant use of your important muscles. He asks, pointedly enough, what you gain from a half-hour exercise routine if all the rest of the day you "slump, crumple and sag into unlovely, harmful positions."

There is a deal of truth in what this straight-from-the-shoulder writer has to say of posture as an exercise in itself. Why do the movie stars sleep without pillows? Because they know, declares Mr. Burgess, that if they spent much of their time in bed at home the way they do propped up in those gorgeous beds under the Klieg lights, they would have humps like camels!

Sit, Stand and Walk Well.

There is mention of a retired British major general who "had a magnificent carriage, and he seemed as young and vigorous as a boy. I asked him one day if he did physical culture exercises. 'Why, certainly, sir,' he answered. 'I'm doing them right now.'" Mr. Burgess is convinced that "if a person will merely sit well, stand well and walk well all the time those dire and tiresome down-ups and daily dozens may be forgotten."

That is all very well as far as it goes. If you have a beautiful figure, perfect posture will certainly help to keep it beautiful. In many instances, it is possible even to make the figure slim and lovely simply by correcting the posture. But when posture correction is necessary you will find that a beautiful carriage is not made from a single resolution.

When the shoulders have become rounded from stooping, first attention is directed toward strengthening those weakened muscles. Otherwise, as soon as you forget about holding your shoulders up, you resume that stooped position. Specific exercise is most important of all in the correction of swayback and those unflattering outward curves of the abdomen and derriere.

Sit, Stand and Walk Well to Keep Youthful Appearance.

Dr. Arnold's New Book Sure to Interest D. C.

By Hope Ridings Miller,
The Post Society Editor.

When Dr. and Mrs. Thurman Arnold and their small son left Washington not so long ago for New Haven, Conn., their host of friends here regretted that the small, gay parties they gave at their residence on Garfield street were folded into the past.

HOPE R. MILLER.

With stimulating talk the chief feature of these gatherings, they were as near informal, open forums as anything in Washington in recent years. The New Deal, the old deal, government here, there and everywhere came up for discussion with everyone present saying his say about what should be done, and what shouldn't, and how the country should be run anyway. Whether these "forums" produced any ideas incorporated in Dr. Arnold's latest book, "The Folklore of Capitalism," just off the Yale Press, I do not know. But one thing is certain—everyone who took part in any of those discussions, everyone who knew Dr. Arnold, as well as many who didn't, will find in this an interesting book from first to last.

Coming to the Department of Justice in June, 1936, on his Sabbatical leave from the Yale Law School, Dr. Arnold served as first assistant to Robert H. Jackson, Assistant Attorney General in charge of the tax division. Later, when Mr. Jackson assumed the post of Assistant Attorney General in charge of the anti-trust division, Dr. Arnold also was transferred, continuing his work until shortly before his appointment expired this month and he went back to resume his duties as professor of law at Yale.

Widely Known In Washington

Although the Arnolds lived here a comparatively short time, they were widely known in the Capital, having spent some time here in the early days of the New Deal when he served as special assistant to the general counsel of the AAA, and as member of the advisory committee of the Wickersham Commission in 1930-31. His extensive range of experience also included a period as legal adviser to the Governor General of the Philippines in administering the Jones-Costigan act, a session in the Legislature of his native State, Wyoming, and a couple of years as dean of the West Virginia College of Law.

This listing of positions he has held is only a beginning, but Who's Who outlines the whole story, indicating, among other things, that his first book, "The Symbols of Government," was published shortly after his first residence in Washington, while his second, "Cases on Trials, Judgments and Appeals," came out last year. The most recent book is aimed at a wider audience than either of the others.

Dr. Arnold's brother, Carl F. Arnold, likewise has had a distinguished career in Washington and elsewhere. Last spring he resigned his position as assistant general counsel of the Federal Communications Commission to resume his duties as dean of the law school, University of Wyoming. His wife is Olga Moore, novelist and writer of short stories frequently, appearing in the "big slick" magazines.

Literary Accent On Duke of Windsor

A recent dispatch indicates that the Duke of Windsor is reading "Stratford Hall, the Great House of the Lees," by Ethel Armes, in preparation for his visit to this country. This gives rise to the speculation that the Windsors will probably journey down through Virginia when they come to this country and that they may visit Stratford.

Whether they go there or not, chances are they will get down to Wakefield Manor for at least a brief visit with Mrs. George Barnett, and there is a possibility the duke might find the Armes book so fascinating he would make a special effort to see the only house in America built in part by his ancestors, George II and the latter's consort Queen Caroline over 200 years ago. He might also be interested in seeing an old Virginia stud farm which, was in active operation prior to the American Revolution.

Incidentally, Miss Armes did much of her work for both the book on Stratford Hall and her volume on Nancy Shippen here in Washington. Her research for the former was made, however, in connection with Yale University, since she was appointed by Dean Meeks in 1931 to do it for the Garvan Institute of Yale, specifically "to provide the historical background for the restoration of Stratford Hall."

Benjamin Plunket, British Attache, Gives Farewell Cocktail Party.

Benjamin Plunket, Attache of the British Embassy, entertained at a cocktail party yesterday as a farewell gesture to Philip Broad, Second Secretary, who will leave today for his new post at Teheran, Persia. The party was held at the home which Mr. Plunket shares with Neil Hogg, Third Secretary of the Embassy, at 84 Kalorama road.

Every woman present, with the exception of Miss Stellita Stapleton, who was in brown, wore black yesterday. Mrs. Harold Simms, wife of the Attache of the British Embassy, wore this shade in frock and hat, unrelieved by any color. Mrs. Albert Dewey was also in black.

Other guests, who toasted Mr. Broad in champagne, were Mrs. Wallach Merriam, Mrs. Francis Whitten, Charles Ritchie, Third Secretary of the Canadian legation; Philip Broadmead and Keith Officer, of the British Embassy; Mr. and Mrs. Harold Hinton, Mr. and Mrs. Leander McCormick Goodhart, Miss Eleanor Ryan and Miss Marguerite Hagner.

Mr. Plunket will accompany Mr. Broad to New York today to see him off on the Conte di Savoia tomorrow.

Eleanor Bishop And Lieut. Powell Are to Be Married

Maj. and Mrs. Harry Bishop, of Fort Sam Houston, Tex., announce the engagement of their daughter, Miss Eleanor Bishop, to Lieut. Beverly Evans Powell, of the United States Army Field Artillery. Maj. and Mrs. Bishop were stationed in Washington for several years before being ordered to their present post.

Miss Bishop attended St. Mary's Academy, in Denver, Col.; the Chevy Chase School, here, and William and Mary College, where she was a member of Kappa Kappa Gamma sorority. She is a niece of Mrs. Glenn Jones, of Washington.

Lieut. Powell, who is a grandson of Mrs. Thomas Dudley Evans, of Russellville, Ky., attended Mercersburg Academy and West Point. He is at present on duty in Fort Sam Houston.

The marriage will take place late this winter, and afterward the couple will reside in Fort Knox, Ky.

About the Town

With Dudley Harmon

MISS JOSEPHINE ROCHE, who has announced her resignation as Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, is going back to her Colorado coal mine without having given Washington society more than a telescopic look at her.

DUDLEY HARMON.

Charming, pretty, a clever conversationalist, Miss Roche was nevertheless not nearly so socially inclined as three other Assistant Secretaries who have resigned within the past few years: Dean Acheson, Lawrence Wood Robert and Thomas Jefferson Coolidge. The Achesons and the Roberts still figure prominently in Capital society, and the Coolidges, although they have since returned to Boston, are by no means hermits.

Miss Roche is only one of many brilliant people in the Government who either because they aren't eager to play the social game, or haven't the leisure, take little part in the whirl here. In Miss Roche's case the first reason is responsible for her seeing mostly her own circle of friends here, among whom are prominent women like Mary Anderson, head of the Women's Bureau of the Department of Labor.

The first of next week will see Miss Roche off again for Colorado. In Washington she has been living in an apartment at 1727 H street.

IF FOR NO OTHER reason than that the telephone at the French Embassy rings every two minutes these days, the staff will be delighted when a new Ambassador is definitely appointed. "We are expecting to hear any day now," patiently replied Charles Lucet, the Attache, when plied with questions the other afternoon.

Now that Georges Bonnet has definitely released his former post as Ambassador here, the name of Jules Henry jumps into headlines again as his probable successor. According to the most recent report (and each one is different), his only rival in the ambassadorial race is Gabriel Puaux, French Minister to Vienna, who is a bit older than our M. Henry. Weighed against the age advantage, however, M. Henry has a broad knowledge of political Washington, gleaned from almost a decade of service here, is a distinct asset to social Washington by virtue of being a superior host, a crack bridge player and consistent diner-outer. In short, if France decided to make the personable Counselor an Ambassador, both political and social Washington would be more than pleased. As most persons here already know, he has been the power behind the ambassadorial post for a number of years.

FOR MANY DIPLOMATS a sojourn in Moscow is something of an ordeal, but not for Charles Eustis Bohlen, who was recently ordered there from the State Department. Mr. Bohlen is one of few who tackled Russian when stationed a few years ago in the Soviet, and now speaks it perfectly. Most foreigners there don't even bother to learn the elements of the language, for, owing to the spy system, their contacts with government officials are scarce.

Mrs. Bohlen will sail shortly to join her husband, who is now with the Nine Power Peace Conference in Brussels.

The Marquis Elliot de Caussade, whose ancestors fought in the American Revolution with the Colonial troops, arrived recently in New York from his centuries-old chateau in Condom, France, and plans to visit here in Washington while in this country.

The marquis was in the World War, and, as an aviator recived the Croix de Guerre and six citations.

Woodring, Ickes, Wallace, Eccles and Marine Commandant Are Guests.

Dr. Halvdan Koht, Norwegian Minister of Foreign Affairs, yesterday was the guest of the Secretary of State, Cordell Hull, at a stag luncheon given amid the plum-colored elegance of the Carlton Hotel.

Place cards carried the names of the Minister of Norway, Wilhelm Munthe de Morgenstierne; the Secretary of War, Harry H. Woodring; the Secretary of the Interior, Harold L. Ickes; the Secretary of Agriculture, Henry A. Wallace; Senator Henrik Shipstead, of Minnesota, and Representative Sol Bloom, of New York.

Also (reading on this side of the table) the Commandant of the Marine Corps, Maj. Gen. Thomas Holcomb; the Chairman of the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, Marriner S. Eccles; the Assistant Secretary of State, Hugh R. Wilson, the legal adviser of the State Department, Green H. Hackworth; the Counselor of the Norwegian Legation, Jorgen Galbe; the Chairman of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, Jesse H. Jones; the Chairman of the Maritime Commission, Joseph P. Kennedy; Harold Hinton, Frederic William Wile and the Chief of Protocol, George T. Summerlin.

When the last cigar was just an ember, and the last crumbs were being whisked away by the head waiter, the Secretary of State and Mrs. Hull, temporarily flinging official life to the four winds, left late in the afternoon for the South, sternly bent on the first informal vacation of their busy year.

Margaret Mohun Weds G. W. Best

After a last minute alteration in their wedding plans which changed the scene of the ceremony from the St. Thomas Apostle Church here to St. Jerome's in Hyattsville, Miss Margaret Mary Mohun and Glenn Williams Best were married yesterday morning at 11 o'clock.

The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Edward J. Mohun, of Hyattsville, and Mr. Best is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Best, of Clarion, Pa.

Miss Elaine Haun, of Catawba, W. Va., served as maid of honor. Bridesmaids were Miss Anna Russell, Miss Lillian Estep, Miss Miriam Alexander, Miss Mary Elizabeth Morris, Miss Jeanne Morris and Miss Louise Day.

The brother of the bridegroom, Francis Best, was best man.

An unusual feature of the ceremony was the fact that it was attended by Mrs. Agnes Smith, of Baltimore, who was the maid of honor at the wedding of the bride's parents, and Victor Smith, also of Baltimore, who was best man at the same time.

Mlle. Veverka, Baron Hildprondt To Marry Soon

From far off Rumania comes news of the engagement of Mlle. Nella Veverka, daughter of the former Czechoslovakian Minister here, and Mme. Veverka, to Baron Fido Hildprondt, of Czechoslovakia. Mr. Veverka served in Washington for eight years before being transferred last winter to Bucharest.

The marriage will take place November 20 in the chapel of the Veverka estate near Prague. After the wedding Baron Hildprondt and his bride will live at the former's castle near the Czechoslovakian capital.

Mlle. Veverka, a tall blonde, was popular among members of the younger set here and a very good tennis player. Her future husband is fond of hunting and maintains large stables.

Zetas to Fete Miss Mayer, Of Alabama

Tea and Campus Party Planned for Sorority Field Secretary.

By Jessie Ash Arndt
The Post Club Editor.

Miss Marion Mayer, of Birmingham, Ala., national field secretary of Zeta Tau Alpha, will arrive this week-end to spend a few days in Washington and will be guest of honor at several affairs given by sorority members during her stay.

Sunday afternoon the alumnae chapter, of which Mrs. Rene Reixach is president, will entertain for her with a tea from 4 to 6 o'clock at the home of Mrs. Lindell Leathers, 10 Arlington road, Westmoreland Hills, Md. In addition to the members of the active and alumnae chapters of the sorority here, guests will include the presidents of the alumnae chapters of other sororities in the City Panhellenic Association and their Panhellenic delegates.

The active chapter at George Washington University will entertain for Miss Mayer Wednesday from 4 to 6 o'clock on the chapter rooms on the campus. This tea will be a campus party. Mrs. John Warlick, Alpha Province president, will receive with the chapter president, Miss Geraldine Dillman, the guest of honor and the two members of the committee in charge, Miss Anne Lehman and Miss Alice Kirkley.

Miss Mayer is stopping in Washington on her return from attending the National Panhellenic Association convention in New York and a visit to Zeta Tau Alpha's famous health center in the mountains of Virginia. She has had an interesting background for the post she fills. After two years at Birmingham-Southern College, she transferred to Northwestern University, where she was graduated. At Birmingham-Southern she was elected to Alpha Lambda Delta, freshman honor society, and became its presideent. She continued her activity in other groups, including dramatic clubs, throughout her college career, and, at Northwestern, was chosen as one of eight campus beauties.

Her present work takes her to the undergraduate and chartered alumnae chapters of Zeta Tau Alpha, of which there are 135 in this country and Canada.

Officers of the alumnae chapter here, in addition to Mrs. Reixach, are Miss Frances Fauntleroy, vice president; Miss Mary Elizabeth McGehee, recording secretary; Mrs. Eugene Seitz, treasurer; Miss Esther Arneson, corresponding secretary; and Miss Adelaide Woodley, historian.

Officers serving with Miss Dillman in the active chapter are: Miss Audrey McCuen, vice president; Miss Frances Nettleton, secretary; Miss Jane Coulter, treasurer; Miss Betty Peabody, historian, and Miss Lehman, guard. Other girls in the chapter are Misses Justine Sampson, Alice Kirkley, Marjorie Weber, Estelle Moore and Gretchen Hill.

Pledges include Misses Elizabeth Wilkinson, Geraldine Barnes, Louise Belton, Edith Butler, Clara Carpenter, Lexey Cragin, Frances Douglas, Gretchen Giddings, Elizabeth Leech, Mary Mies, Virginia Moore, Jean Pauly, Marian Swan, Lorraine Williams, Evelyn Wyner and Martha Hamilton.

Receiving with Mrs. Leathers and the guest of honor Sunday will be Mrs. Reixach, Mrs. Warlick, who is past president of the city Panhellenic as well as president of Alpha Province of Zeta Tau Alpha, and Judge Ellen K. Raedy, honorary member of the sorority.

Mayflower Society Here to Be Host

Plans are being made by the District of Columbia Society of Mayflower Descendants to entertain members of the General Society in Washington next autumn. Frank B. Steele, district governor, will extend the formal invitation at the board meeting of the national organization in New York City Saturday of next week.

Others from Washington attending the board meeting will be Mrs. Bertha M. Robertson, assistant general from the District society, and Miss Margaret I. Fraser, a delegate from the general society to the American Coalition.

Officers for the ensuing year, in addition to Mr. Steele, include Mrs. Robertson, deputy governor; Robert F. Wood, captain; Mrs. Harvey A. Smith, elder; Mrs. Brinkley A. Callicott, secretary; Miss Frances L. Henckels, assistant secretary; C. Leonard Brown, treasurer; Mrs. Gaius M. Brumbaugh, historian; Miss Minnie S. Sutherland, librarian, and Mrs. Warren K. Kmley, Miss Fraser, Mrs. Edith M. Gray, Mr. Frank M. Newberry, Mrs. Oscar S. Heizer, Miss Caroline V. Sudler and Miss Inez L. Wiggin, assistants.

Moose Women In Meeting Here

Plans for November activities of Columbia Chapter, Women of the Moose, were formulated when all committee chairmen met last night at the home of the past regent, Mrs. E. T. Deegan.

Mrs. H. J. Clark, membership chairman, announced a November campaign for a class of new members to be initiated in honor of the annual visit of Grand Dame of Veteran Women of the Moose Mrs. Mary Hooper, of Baltimore, Md., which is scheduled for December 10. The library chairman, Mrs. William Sullivan, reported her committee is planning a program on November 12 at conclusion of the regular business meeting of the chapter which will include a book shower for Mooseheart, the home and school for orphan children. The annual turkey dinner, sponsored by the Moosehaven committee, will be held November 15 at Moose Hall, 1414 I street northwest, with Past Regent Mrs. E. T. Deegan as chairman.

Monday the publicity committee will meet at Moose Hall for the purpose of issuing the monthly chapter news bulletin and the membership and social service committee will meet Tuesday evening at the same place to plan for the new membership campaign and discuss the Thanksgiving project of the social service committee.

The ritualistic committee will conduct final rehearsal of the opening ceremony from the new ritual on Thursday, November 4, for use at the next regular meeting of the chapter November 12.

THE WOMEN'S NATIONAL PRESS CLUB, which has a gift, or something, for gathering interesting visitors for its luncheon sessions, will have three next week and is changing its meeting day from Tuesday to Monday to welcome them. They are Rockwell Kent, artist, author and traveler; Anna Nagle, star of "Victoria the Great," and Herbert Wilcox, producer-director. The luncheon will be at the Willard, as usual.

MRS. WALTER P. HARMAN, president of the Takoma Park Women's Club, will be hostess at her home this afternoon, from 3 to 5 o'clock, at a tea in honor of the new members of the club. The party will give them opportunity to meet the department chairmen and learn of the work each section carries on.

The various departments, incidentally, are busy with programs of unusual interest. The drama department met Wednesday night with guest speakers from the Civic Theater, the Arts Club, the Blackfriars Guild and the Pierce Hall Players, telling of their plans for production this season. Yesterday morning the music section met at the home of Mrs. M. C. Tighe for a musical program by Jean Wilson Seaman, pianist, and Mrs. A. G. Stone, contralto, and a talk on the Army Band by Capt. Darcy, its leader. The government study department meets next Thursday at the home of Mrs. Byron M. Coon—so there is plenty of choice for the new members.

Mrs. Harman will have receiving with her the various department chairmen—Mrs. Gilbert G. Sebard, chairman of literature; Mrs. Frank A. Richmond, of government; Mrs. Frank A. Nichols, of music; Mrs. R. D. Rands, of drama; Mrs. J. N. Quinn, of the garden section; Mrs. Coon, of art, and Mrs. Guy H. Goodman, of the homemakers.

THE BIRTHDAY of Elizabeth Cady Stanton, November 12, will be observed by the National Woman's Party with brief ceremony in the Capitol at the statue of Mrs. Stanton, Lucretia Mott and the best-known of the pioneers in the movement for women's rights, Susan B. Anthony. Among those who will be present for the observance will be Adelaide Johnson, one of the founders of the Woman's Party who—most appropriately—was chosen as the sculptor for the monument. Mrs. Johnson, who maintains her studio at 230 Maryland avenue, not far from Alva Belmont House, the headquarters of the party, was a personal friend of both Susan B. Anthony and Elizabeth Cady Stanton.

The Ellen Spencer Mussey Tent of the Daughters of Union Veterans has completed arrangements for the celebration of veterans' night with a dinner and reception at the Lafayette Hotel on November 19. The hour is earlier than that of most dinners, having been announced for 5:30. Mrs. Sylvia D. MacLaughlin is president of the tent.

EARLENE WHITE, president of the National Federation of Business and Professional Women's Clubs, has some speaking engagements ahead for next month. In Baltimore, she will address a joint meeting of the Soroptimist and B. and and P. W. Clubs on November 5. She will be guest of honor at a luncheon of the Greensboro (N. C.) Business and Professional Women's Club on November 12 and will speak at the assembly of the Woman's College afterward. Her visit to Greensboro is a stop on the way to Charlotte, where she will attend a meeting of the State board on November 12.

"DID YOU REMEMBER the white elephant table and save some article for it? Have you a towel or apron or some extra little article for the gift table?"

These questions went out the other day to members of the Chevy Chase Chapter of the Y.W.C.A., who will have their annual luncheon and sale next Tuesday at 2:30 in the assembly room of the Chevy Chase Presbyterian Church. Mrs. Laura Louise Eiker is the president of the group, which has a membership of 75.

Teachers Honor Mrs. Page Kirk For Fight Against Marriage Ban

Echoes of the victory in the fight against the notorious "Clause 213" of the Economy Act will be heard Tuesday afternoon when members of the Teachers' Alliance entertain at a reception honoring their president, Mrs. Page Kirk, for her work for the repeal of the measure. The affair will be from 4 to 6 at Wilson Teachers' College, with Dr. Chester Holmes, assistant superintendent of schools, and other school officials of the city among the guests.

The Teachers' Alliance, which has a membership of about 300, was one of the organizations which engaged actively in the campaign to defeat the "married persons clause." Mrs. Kirk as its president, led the fight defending the teachers' right to marry and hold their jobs. The alliance has not continued its meetings since the repeal but expects to reorganize later in the season.

In New York.

Mrs. Wrisley Brown, of 2319 Wyoming avenue, is at the Waldorf Astoria in New York, where she will be until returning here on Sunday evening.

Sarron, Armstrong Meet for Featherweight Championship Tonight

G. W. IS UNDERDOG IN GAME WITH TULSA TONIGHT

The Washington Post Sports

*X WASHINGTON: FRIDAY, OCTOBER 29, 1937 21

This Morning

This Tulsa Eleven's My Favorite.

By Shirley Povich.

My favorite football team is in town. The University of Tulsa may not own even a sprig of ivy, I have no idea how it stands academically and it may never reach a big-time status. But I am for it, as we say in our set. Because its football teams give a guy an eyeful of hell-bent football—explosive stuff that never fails to horrify the conservative coaches.

POVICH.

Tulsa's been coming to Washington for four or five years now to play G. W. U. and has always made it a thumping ball game. The Tulsa kids will be out there at Griffith Stadium again tonight. And also will I. With vivid memories of those double and triple passes, that screwy spread formation and other tactics by which the Tulsans have bamboozled G. W. U. in the past, I want to see that ball game.

* * * *

They're the gamblers of the gridiron—these Tulsans. I've seen 'em sling a pass from behind their own goal line at a time when they were in the lead with a fine disregard for all the orthodox tenets of the game. I've seen 'em run the ball from deep in their own territory on fourth down with 7 yards to go and get away with it. They pass that ball around as if it were a crime to be caught in possession of it.

* * * *

That spread play of theirs, in which their seven-man line is extended across the 40-yard breadth of the field, is a breath-taking play whether it works or not. For three years hand running, it was the play that whipped George Washington. The G. W. coaches finally got wise and now the spread play is part and parcel of the Colonials' repertoire—one of their best ground gainers.

* * * *

Tulsa never has played anything but wide-open football in the past 20 years, I understand. The Tulsans just naturally fell into the Southwestern tyle of play and when their colorful little coach "Gus" Henderson betook himself to professional ranks a couple of years ago, it was only natural that they came up with another coach who was grounded in the wide-open stuff.

* * * *

He's Vic Hurt, formerly of Southern Methodist University, whose aerial circuses astounded the football world not so many years ago. At S. M. U., Hurt was the line coach. It's pretty significant that S. M. U. ceased to be a power in national football ever since Hurt deserted the team for the job with Tulsa.

* * * *

Tulsa has been operating as the University of Tulsa only since 1920. Before that it was Presbyteria.. College, founded in Muskogee, Indian Territory, by the Missionary fathers in 1894. In the year of Oklahoma's statehood, 1907, the college moved to Tulsa and 13 years later took the name of the University of Tulsa. I learn that it is now coeducational with an enrollment of 923 students. Situated in the heart of the oil district, Tulsa is naturally famed for its School of Petroleum Engineering, a mecca for technical scholars from a score of foreign countries.

* * * *

There's evidence that Tulsa's teams haven't changed much since the first golden-outfitted gang of football magicians laid waste to G. W. at Griffith Stadium in 1930 with their crazy-quilt formations and unorthodox passing. Tonight they will display a formation called the "Flexible Flanker," which sounds like some kind of a Shanghai gesture that might send the game crashing down about the ears of the G. W.'s.

* * *

The other day against Oklahoma A. and M., the Tulsans scored three touchdowns, all of them on plays that covered 24 yards or more. Against Oklahoma, in the opening game, Tulsa scored on a forward pass that, after a 28-yard gain, evolved into a lateral that covered the remaining 30 yards. And on the same day, Halfback Rogers zig-zagged his way up the field on a punt return, tossed it over his shoulder to Jones on the 50-yard line and another Tulsa touchdown was produced.

* * *

They have a 160-pounder named Morris White, whose feats this season and last are something to write Aunt Tillie about. He averaged

Mike Jacobs Calls Gate At $40,000

Armstrong Favored at 3-2, Garden Scene of Title Bout.

By the Associated Press.

New York, Oct. 28.—Petey Sarron, Birmingham, Ala., Syrian, and Henry Armstrong, Los Angeles Negro, will usher in Mike Jacobs as boxing boss of Madison Square Garden tomorrow night with a 15-round battle for the featherweight championship of the world.

The match represents Jacob's first Garden venture since assuming control of boxing in the big arena the late Tex Rickard built in Eighth avenue and Mike's sixth championship promotion in four months.

Starting with the Braddock-Louis heavyweight fight in June at Chicago, Mike followed with the Louis-Farr engagement in the Yankee Stadium, then trotted out his carnival of champions last month in which three world title holders participated.

Jacobs predicted his debut in the Garden would attract 16,000 customers and a "gate" of $40,000.

Three to One Favorite.

Armstrong, who has knocked out 21 of the 22 men he has fought this year, is favored at odds shifting from 3-1 to 3-2. The Negro can hit savagely with either fist. He is fast, shifty, game and particularly dangerous at close range.

On the other hand, he has never traveled the championship distance of 15 rounds. Those who like Sarron's chances are relying on this, together with the fact that the coast boy has had some difficulty getting down to the featherweight limit of 126 pounds.

Armstrong has weighed around 132 pounds for most of his fights and it remains to be seen whether he can lop off 6 pounds and retain his strength.

Sarron, who won his N. B. A. title from Freddie Miller in Washington last year, has successfully defended it twice, once against Miller and once against Baby Manuel at Dallas. The Syrian doesn't hit as hard as Armstrong, but he is aggressive and can take it. He has never been knocked out or even knocked down in eight yaers of ring campaigning.

Barring an unexpected draw, the bout will go a long way toward clearing up the muddled situation in the 126-pound division.

Many Champs.

Sarron is the champion in the States controlled by the National Boxing Commission, but he has never been so recognized in California, where Armstrong wears the crown, or in New York, where Mike Belloise has been on the books as No. 1 featherweight.

Belloise, recuperating from a severe illness, will be out of circulation until spring and has voluntarily relinquished his claim to the New York title. The New York commission has agreed to recognize tomorrow night's winner as the champion.

Both Armstrong and Sarron have agreed to fight Belloise if returned victorious.

Frankie Blair, Camden, N. J., fights Jimmy Leto, Hartford, Conn., and Vittorio Venturi, Italy, meets Milt Aron, Chicago, in two eight-round preliminaries.

Credit Bureau and Guy-Curran bowling teams still remained deadlocked in the Department Store League, each team having won 11 and lost 4. In last nights matches at Recreation Alleys the Credit Bureau, led by Dave William's 367, took a 2-1 decision from Jelleff's, while Guy-Curran did the same to Kann's, defending champions.

Lansburgh's, paced by Al McDonald's 374 and Bowman's 360, swept their set from Lamb Seal & Stencil Co. Lansburgh's also chalked up a new season record with a 618 team game. In other matches Raleigh Haberdasher took the odd game from Woodward & Lothrop, while Hahn's Shoes did the same to The Hecht Co.

Frank Xanten paced the District Government League with a high game of 152 and set of 376 while his team, Highway No. 2, rolled high team game of 576 and Water took set honors at 1,655.

Navy Drills Against Subs For Quakers

Hardwick aid Assistants Prep Charges for Philadelphia.

Annapolis, Md., Oct. 28.—Head Coach Hank Hardwick and his assistants drilled their Navy charges in almost all the fundamentals of football this afternoon. It will be the last hard practice in preparation for the Pennsylvania game in Philadelphia Saturday.

Much of the time was given to a detailed drill in the running and passing plays, some of them new, which will be used against Pennsylvania. A strong Squad B team opposed in dummy scrimmage.

Hardwick is still in some doubt as to the make-up of his starting backfield. Arthur Franks and Emmett Wood, the most recent addition to the varsity first string, are sure starters, but there is some doubt as to Bill Ingram and Lem Cooke and Bob Antrim and Harold Hansen. All of them, however, are certain to see service during the game.

With Ingram, Cooke and Wood as the chief carriers, and the others as blocking backs, the Navy will present much the strongest and most versatile attack against Penn which it has had available so far this season. Ingram has been standing the practice of the week well and appears to be in normal physical condition again, while Cooke and Wood have developed during the present season.

Lobert Named Coach.

Philadelphia, Oct. 28 (AP).—President Gerry Nugent announced tonight reappointment of Honus Lobert as coach of the Phillies ball club for 1938. It will be his fourth season.

Gene Larkin is accepting entries at the golf shop. More than a score of club "angels" are giving prizes in addition to the bottle of champagne donated by the president. Morning prizes will be handed out at a club luncheon.

Cubs' Offer Is Accepted By Lazzeri

By William Weekes.

Associated Press Sports Writer.

Chicago, Oct. 28 (AP).—Tony Lazzeri turned his back on a dozen sparkling years with the New York Yankees today to start a new career in the National League with Chicago's Cubs.

After an hour of conversation with owner Phil K. Wrigley the solemn little Italian, second baseman and spark of the world champion Yankees' infield, signed a one-year contract as utility player and coach. As per custom in such matters, nothing was revealed as to the terms of the contract, but Lazzeri, who drew an excellent salary with the Yankees, apeared perfectly satisfied.

The brief ceremony cleared up one of major league baseball's best "mysteries." Owner Wrigley arranged with the New York club for 34-year-old Tony's release, so that he might deal with him openly. He had heard Lazzeri was ambitious to land a managerial job and invited Tony to come from his San Francisco home for a talk. The opening of negotiations inspired rumors that the former Yankee might replace Charlie Grimm.

No Managerial Change.

Wrigley, who has insisted all along that Grimm will pilot the club again next year, once more made it clear that he plans no change in that department. He repeated that he thought Lazzeri, ranked as one of the smartest of players, would be a big help in the campaign to bring the National League championship back to Chicago. The Cub owner said Lazzeri was brought into the organization with Grimm's enthusiastic approval.

"This is just what I wanted," Lazzeri said. "I will be ready to play any time the Cubs need me, and I want to learn about this coaching business. It's a great opportunity. It will add a lot to my baseball future and gives me a start toward reaching my goal, a managing job."

"It will seem kind of strange not to be with the Yankees again," he confessed. "Twelve years is a long time to spend with one club. But I feel just like I'm starting all over again. I get a kick out of that."

Joined Yanks in 1926.

Lazzeri, who joined the Yankees in 1926 after establishing a reputation as a home run hitter with Salt Lake City of the Pactific Coast League, polished off his American League career as one of the chief Yankee World Series heroes. He led both the Yanks and Giants in hitting with a .400 average and handled 27 fielding chances faultlessly.

His batting average for 11 seasons was .279, and he had an unofficial mark of .245 last season, a part of which was spent nursing injuries.

He will start his return journey to San Francisco tomorrow or Friday to arrive in time for a celebration in honor of himself and his former Yankee mates, Joe Di Maggio and Frankie Crosetti.

Yale Keeps Line-up.

New Haven, Conn, Oct. 28 (AP).—Yale will start the same line-up that blasted Penn, Army and Cornell against Dartmouth in the bowl Saturday. The Blue varsity again watched formations as demonstrated by the scrubs today.

Campbell's Record Unofficially Broken

Bonneville Salt Flats, Utah, Oct. 28. (AP).—Capt. George E. T. Eyston shot his monstrous automobile, Thunderbolt, over the glistening salt flats today at 309.6 miles an hour—the fastest man ever traveled on land.

The Englishman exceeded Sir Malcolm Campbell's world land speed record of 301.1292 M. P. H. but his 7-ton, 24-cylinder car broke down on the return journey, leaving intact the record made on the same white straightaway in 1935.

American Automobile Association rules require runs in both directions within one hour to qualify for measured mile records.

Tommy Farr Sued By English Girl

Bridgend, Glamorganshire, Wales, Oct. 28 (U.P.).—Tommy Farr, British heavyweight fighter, was sued today by Miss Clarice Switen, 23, who charged that Farr is the father of her child.

The case will be heard tomorrow in Bridgend police court. Counsel for each party was ordered to appear, but it could not be learned whether Farr and Miss Switen would be present. The girl until recently worked in a store in her home town of Porthcawl.

Goldberg Is Benched.

Pittsburgh, Oct. 28 (AP).—Coach Jock Sutherland announced tonight he expected to keep Marshall Goldberg, his star backfield player, out of Saturday's football game against Carnegie Tech because of an injured leg.

Morris White Star Of Invading Team

Triple-Threat Back Is Spearhead of Visitors' Attack—Tommy Thompson, Soph Sensation, Also Offered by Local Team's Foe.

By Lewis F. Atchison.

For the second time in as many weeks, or within seven days to be exact, George Washington's gridmen face an inter-sectional foe tonight at Griffith Stadium, and for the second time they are the underdogs. Tulsa's Golden Hurricane, a sizable collection of gents, will supply the opposition.

Boasting victories over Oklahoma and Oklahoma A. and M., with a 13-to-20 defeat at Texas Christian's hands, the only blemish on its record, Tulsa is a 7-to-5 choice over the Colonials. But, although it was disappointing last week against Alabama, the downtown eleven has plenty of supporters.

If past contests between the schools are any criterion, tonight's game will feature wide-open football with a superabundance of passing. The Oilers specialize in spread plays, running, passing and even kicking from the spread formation. A terrific amount of speed is necessary to make the visitors' attack click, but in practice yesterday they seemed to have all they want—and without sacrificing heft.

Morris White, 160-pound triple-threat star and a veritable iron man, is spearhead of the attack. He does the punting, most of the passing, and 75 per cent of the ball carrying. Last year he averaged more than 40 yards on punts, and gained an average of 5.6 yards a try from scrimmage.

Tulsa's line, which appeared to be fully as big as Alabama's, is fast—faster than the Colonials, and should have no trouble holding its own with "Botchy" Koch's pupils. Calvin Thomas, 202-pound tackle, and George Adams, 178-pound center, are standouts in the forward walk, and, according to Tim Moynihan, who scouted the Hurricane last week, are among the best George Washington will encounter all season.

The downtown school, however, has made a couple of changes that figure to bolster its defense and at the same time add a punch to its attack. Bob Nowasky and Jay Turner have replaced Bruce Mahan and Lew Carroll, respectively. Turner will start at fullback and play that position defensivly, while Nowaskey is scheduled to start at half, shifting to tailback post when G. W. has the ball.

Head Coach Jim Pixlee and his assistants feel that their men will make a much better showing tonight than they did against Alabama. That defeat, they contend, removed much superfluous confidence from the squad, and that the team will be smoother and far more effective than it was against the Tide.

Larry Kelley Turns Writer; Picks Eli Over Dartmouth

Larry Kelley, Yale captain and All-American end last year, writes of football today as he sees it. On Monday, he will analyze the Yale-Dartmouth game.

By Larry Kelley.

And so I'm back into football again . . .

But this time the situation is far different from that of last year and the year before.

Then it was into a uniform and out on the field for a few hours of relentless training or gruelling play, and some fun—the fun depending on who won.

It's on the sidelines, up in the stands, watching today's stars in action, trying to diagnose the reasons for the success of teams—not an unpleasant task, even though it doesn't compare with being down there on the field in the thick of things.

To those who have never played the game, it is hard to describe the thrill and elation which come to the player on the field, the urge to battle, as it were, which possesses most of those who are (to put it tritely) "giving their all" for their various alma maters.

The satisfaction which comes with a hard, driving tackle, a well-made block, or a spectacular play is perhaps hard for a layman to appreciate, but it is there in the sensations of the player—just as there also is the self-condemnation for a poor play, a missed block, the vain regrets for a faulty performance which remains in the consciousness of the "goat" when his particular error may be many times magnified if it loses a game.

the excitement, not because they are any the less mistakes, but because they are not the headline "boners" which are played up as the reasons for loss of games.

Harman Is Criticized.

I am reminded of last Saturday's headliner, when Harvey Harman, Penn coach, was unjustly accused in the Sunday editions of throwing away a chance to beat Gergetown via the field goal route because he sent in a substitute (making 12 players on the field) while what would have been the winning kick was very neatly coursing between the goal posts. It was later proved that the reason for the 5-yard penalty which voided the kick was not imposed for the substitution, but because the team had taken more than the allotted 30 seconds to put the ball in play.

The "boner," then, was the fault of the team on the field, not of the coach on the bench.

In many cases, however, the criticism handed out is not retracted. Take, for instance, the case of Roy Riegals in the 1929 Rose Bowl game between the University of Syracuse and Georgia Tech. I doubt if many have ever forgotten his 75-yard dash to his own goal line—yet how many know that the same player received all-American mention for his play the following year?

Revisions Are Numerous.

Just as sensational as mistakes are the "smart plays" by individuals and coaches, which also get their share of the headlines. All through the history of football run instances of smart playing which have caused the rule-makers headaches and long sessions to remedy the "evil."

From year to year plays crop up which demand revision of the rules. One of the most recent was the rule change on the intentional or unintentional kicking of a free ball. It gained prominence not because it was the first time a free ball had ever been kicked, but because the "accident" changed the outcome of the game.

Even this year, when the rules are thought to be well-nigh foolproof, a play has come up which demands the attention of the rule-makers: The forward fumble. This

Golden Era Wins Coral Gables Purse, Laurel Feature Event

White Sand Is Second by Half Length

By Walter Haight.
A Staff Correspondent.

Laurel, Md., Oct. 28.—For five races today, the favorites performed like so many trained pigs and included in the group was the Millsdale Stable's Golden Era. The gelded son of Golden Broom picked the Coral Gables Purse, the day's feature race, as the spot to show one of his best efforts and bring his army of backers a $3.80 mutuel. White Sand, representing W. E. Johnson and the lightweight of the party, was second, beaten a half length, with Gladys Whitney's Red Rain third. Only five faced the barrier for the mile and a sixteenth trip.

Golden Era, ridden by Charlie Corbett, won more easily than the chart reveals. Corbett was first away and had a strong grip on the gelding until, with a sixteenth to go, he struck him once with the whip and then settled into a hand ride. White Sand had some trouble in the early running but, after moving up menacingly entering the stretch, could not dislodge Golden Era in the final drive.

A thrilling dead heat marked the close of today's program here. Balapin, owned by Mrs. M. M. Morin, and Zembla, the property of Betty Bowman, of Marlboro, finished so close together that the judges could not separate them with the aid of the camera. Bounding Count was third. Balapin was in front every inch of the way except the last, being caught at the wire by Zemble's closing rush. Balapin paid $4.60 to win and Zembla's backers received $3.50. Bounding Count was third.

Building Trades won the sixth race at a $16.90 mutuel. Genevra M., ridden by Kenneth McCombs, did not have much trouble with eleven juvenile rivals in the first event. She went to the front when her rider asked and held a four length lead over Bloomer Girl at the end. Greenski was third to the $6 shot in the 6-furlong struggle.

Absconder Wins Second.

Absconder, owned by the Tranquility Farm, defeated a field of Maryland-breds that included Acautaw in the second race. The big gelding was driven to the wire a length and a quarter in advance of the ancient son of Trojan. Zinnia, after setting the pace, was a dying third in the field of nine. Absconder paid a mere $3.40.

Masked General brought first groans and then applause from the favorite players in the third race. The Pompey gelding was played as if he were much superior and he proved as much. Jockey Joe Wagner brought him to the front nearing the stretch, but Masked General would not make the turn, going to the outside fence. However, Wagner straightened him and then went into a drive that regained the lead from Mistralkin. Noble Boy was third to the $3.80 shot.

Jockey J. Mattison shared the glory in the fourth race with Crepe, running in the interests of P. H. Faulconer and teamed as an entry with Could Be. Mattison refused to let the colt step in the stretch and whipped him home a length in front of Short Distance. Hi Cliff was third. The entry paid a $4.80 mutuel.

Neither Seabiscuit or War Admiral will go to the post Saturday if the track is slow or worse. Their handlers made this known rather definitely this morning.

The big three of the thoroughbreds here were on the track this morning. War Admiral loafed the reverse way of the course and stood at the wall gate for ten minutes. Seabiscuit merely galloped around the track. Heelfly cantered, accompanied by a pony.

It appears certain that Heelfly will not compete in the $7,500 Pimlico Special next Wednesday. The T. P. Morgan horses will be shipped to California Sunday as had been previously planned, it was learned today.

The nearby Patuxent River overflowed the main road into the track again this morning and this afternoon's crowd was forced to ford a stream or come in through a narrow dirt road.

The Pittsburgh Panthers, rated 100.6, have again moved into the leading position in the Nation. Their predicted 21-point defeat of Wisconsin, rated 75.0, should give them the stamina necessary for the Carnegie Tech gridders, provided they do not become overconfident. Carnegie Tech has played up and down games, reaching at their peak, a playing power of 87.9 difference-by-score points in an individual game.

Iabama, next in line at 100.5, has a breather in Kentucky, rated 70.7. The Crimson Tide, as well as Pittsburgh, has its eye on the Rose Bowl game and should come closer in this next conflict.

Fordham, rated 96.1 as a power-point average, will find North Carolina, rated 85.3, a tough assignment. The Rams should have recovered from the logical letdown encountered after the terrific struggle with Pittsburgh, and should perform better than they did against Texas Christian. If they do not, their first defeat is in line, as they displayed only 82.8 scoring-power points in the T. C. U. encounter.

Both Duquesne and Ohio State take on breathers the coming week in Richmond and Chicago respectively. A little caution from overconfidence should provide the proper build-up for the Carnegie Tech and Indiana games of the succeeding week. Ohio State gave Northwestern the predicted licking. This year's schedule has not been so opportune for the Wildcats in that they are meeting their strong opposition at a time when their opposition is in top form. Last year they met Ohio State after Ohio State had been punished by Pitt, and Minnesota after the Gophers had overtrained for the exceptionally strong Purdue team.

All eyes will be focused upon the Notre Dame-Minnesota fracas at Minneapolis next Saturday even though there are many headliners throughout the country. Because of Notre Dame's tough assignment with the Navy last Saturday and Minnesota's open date, it appears as if Notre Dame will not be able to cope with the superior power of the Gophers.

Watch This Man—George Washington

This might well be a character in The Post's list of potential All-Americans, but it's only Morris White, Tulsa halfback, who will play against George Washington tonight. However, judging by his past performances, the Colonials may reap rich dividends by WATCHING THIS MAN.

Carrus, Kelly Take Cue Lead

Philadelphia, Oct. 29 (AP).—A hometown boy, George Kelly, grabbed the spotlight in the world's pocket billiard championship today as he and Jimmy Caras, of Wilmington, Del., won their first matches in the Round-Robin tourney.

Kelly set a new high run of 74 in beating youthful Irving Crane, of Livonia, N. Y., 125 to 73, while Caras came from behind to defeat Bennie Allen, of Kansas City, 125 to 85, going out on an unfinished string of 42.

Starting the seventh inning on the short end of a 27 to 26 count, Kelly began to find the pockets with regularity, getting the cue ball into nice position after shots that drew repeated applause from the audience.

His most difficult shot came after the balls were racked up the second time. He knocked the 12 ball into a far pocket after a six-bank shot that still left the cue ball in perfect position.

District Employes Golf Set for Monday

The District employes' golf tournament has been postponed to Monday and Tuesday, November 1 and 2, and transferred to the Indian Spring Golf Club. The entrance fee remains at $1.00 and the greens' fee also is still $1.00. Players may make their own pairings and play at any time during the two days.

Time Out! BY CHET SMITH

Badminton Set Formulates Plans

Badminton teams are urged to have representatives at Central High School Cadet Lounge Tuesday at 8 p. m. to attend a meeting where plans will be made for the opening of the second year of the Community Center's Badminton League.

Play is tentatively scheduled to start November 15 with Tuesday nights as the playing time, all games being played at Central. Three courts are located in the Mount Pleasant school, making it possible to have three games going on at the same time. Washington Badminton Club won the title in the six-team league last year.

George Washington University and Wilson Teacher College are expected to enter the loop. Each team is to play the others twice. Teams will be composed of four men who will play three singles and two doubles games.

Kanner and Swimmer on Monday Card

To Support Reid-Ingram Bout on Fight Card at Turner's.

Murray Kanner, Matt Twomey's stringbean heavyweight, who thinks he's just as good as any heavyweight around here—and that goes for the Tows and Gallaghers—will appear on Monday night's boxing show at Turner's Arena, meeting Jimmy Swimmer, of Baltimore, in a six-round bout in support of the feature match between Ray Ingram and Al Reid.

Kanner has been rarin' to go ever since he walloped Jack Torrance, and followed with a knockout over Kirkwood Burke. The former University of North Carolina amateur claims he can lick both Tow and Gallagher.

Also booked for a six-rounder were Pete Galiano, the Baltimore lightweight, who is very popular here, and Jack Giacalone, an Italian stablemate of Reid. Galiano is remembered for his stirring matches last winter with Irish Johnny Dean, while Giacalone is considered a good club fighter around Gotham.

In the top si-rounder, George Abrams, Sid Fishel's 19-year-old star who has won ten straight fights since turning pro nine months ago, will meet Vic Finazzo, of Baltimore, a youngster who whipped Ivan Nedomatsky, former Maryland University star, when the latter fought under an assumed name this past summer in Harrisburg, Pa.

Pro League Lead May Go To Redskins

Dodger Clash Is Vital to Hopes of Local Pro Eleven.

The lead in the Eastern Division of the National Football League will be the objective of the Washington Redskins when they invade Brooklyn to do battle with the Dodgers on Sunday at Ebbetts Fields.

On two contingencies the hopes of the Redskins hinge: (1) A victory over the Brooklyn Club, and (2) a defeat for the New York Giants at the hands of the Chicago Bears.

While the Redskins are meeting the Dodgers, the Bears and the Giants will be clashing across the river in New York. If the Bears preserve their unbeaten record with a victory over the Giants and the Redskins beat the Dodgers the Eastern Division standing will then show Washington in first place with five victories and two defeats against the Giants' four victories and two defeats.

Still incensed by the frequent fumbling of his Redskins, which he blamed for both of their defeats, Coach Ray Flaherty yesterday sent his squad through a prolonged scrimmage at Griffith Stadium.

Battles as Kelley.

Performing on the second team was Cliff Battles, Flaherty's ground-gaining ace, but it was no demotion for Battles. The star back was used to simulate the tactics of John "Shipwreck" Kelley, most feared of the Brooklyn backs.

Kelley, a heavy stockholder in the Dodgers and secretary-treasurer of the club, only recently announced his comeback to a player's role. The former Kentucky ace played his first game of the season last week after announcing his retirement from active duty. Flaherty believes that if Kelley's gallops can be checked, the Redskins will repeat their early season victory over the Brooklyn Club.

Mack to Get Rest.

How to enjoy both
CIGARS
and KISSES
Test shows that VINTAGE TOBACCO is at least 25% easier on your breath than all other 5¢ cigars tested
LOTS OF MEN have something to learn about smoking. It's possible to get the enjoyment that only a cigar gives—yet keep your breath fresh . . . if you'll smoke a Vintage cigar.
New scientific discoveries have shown that White Owl's Vintage tobacco is very low in the substances that cause unpleasant tobacco breath. Tests with a delicate osmoscope prove that this tobacco leaves less odor.
White Owl is a better cigar because it always has a Vintage-tobacco filler. Nature—not factory processing—made this tobacco exceptionally mild, mellow.
We maintain a vast crop-inspection system—the only known organization of its kind—to locate Vintage tobacco. Even in Vintage years, we classify all filler tobacco into seven grades—and buy only tobacco of the quality of the top three for use in White Owls.
We'll bet the ladies agree with you—and there's a lot more satisfaction in smooth, mellow White Owls.
The Metallic Nose Knows
Scientists use a sensitive osmoscope to measure odor . . . to record its intensity and lasting power. Ten different brands of 5¢ cigars were tested by this machine. White Owl was at least 25% easier on the breath than all the others. After 30 minutes, all trace of tobacco odor disappeared from the breath of White Owl smokers.

Manhattan Eleven Arrives Today for Game With Georgetown

Coach Chick Meehan and his men are scheduled to arrive at 1 p. m., and will go immediately to the Shoreham Hotel where headquarters have been established. Later the players will repair to Griffith Stadium for a brief workout and to acquaint themselves with the lay of the land.

This meeting of the two schools will be the fifth in as many years. Georgetown rallied to gain a 20-20 tie in the first game, and then came on to win the two succeeding games, 9-0, and 13-0, respectively. Manhattan scored its first victory over the Hoyas last year, 13-0, in a bitterly contested game.

This game also marks Manhattan's first visit to Washington under the wing of Meehan, one of the most colorful personalities the game ever has known.

Manhattan's attack will be built around its sharpshooting passer, Vic Fusia, reputedly a second Sammy Baugh, who can dot i's at 20 paces. Fusia has completed more than 50 per cent of his passes this season, which is a fair average in any league.

The big Italian boy whips his passes with tremendous accuracy and speed, personally accounting for Manhattan's touchdown against Texas A. and M. He connected once to Al Caruso and once to Capt. Jack Daly, the second time for a touchdown.

But Georgetown is ready for its guest. Hagerty has drilled his men long and painstakingly in the art of pass defense and has given them a few new offensive tricks for their own attack. Tommy Keating and Elmer Moulin will lead the attack. Keating, after suffering a painful injury, returned to the line-up last week and was a standout against Penn. Moulin saw the Penn game from the sidelines because of a sprained ankle, but will be ready to go tomorrow.

Georgetown's line is expected to be the same that made such an excellent stand against the Quakers. Hagerty and Dubofsky, line coach, are satisfied that they have found the best forward combination available.

Terps Polish Offense for Florida Tilt

Honed as fine as the edge of a new razor blade, and as eager as a 2-year-old colt, the University of Maryland's gridmen will taper off this afternoon for tomorrow's home-coming game with Florida at College Park.

Equipped with a new set of plays to use on the Gators and an especially devised defense to stop Walter Mayberry, Florida's flashy back, the Terps will conclude a week of strenuous practice with a brief workout and signal drill. Everybody on the squad is in good physical condition.

To all outward appearances the Terps have not slipped, mentally since reaching high "C" for the Syracuse game last week, which they won, 13 to 0, thereby providing one of the day's major upsets. Head Coach Frank Dobson spared his regulars in practice, but bore down on the reserves by putting them through a couple of grueling scrimmages with the freshmen.

Dobson is making only one change in the line-up that started against Syracuse. Frank Skotnicki, who snagged a pass for a touchdown in the last quarter and later gathered in another desperate Orange heave just before the game ended, will supplant Pershing Mondorff at right halfback. His pass-catching ability can be used nicely against Mayberry, who is one of the best peggers in the South. Mondorff, however, will see action.

Blair Smith, rangy end who has been on the shelf with water on the knee, is back in uniform and ready to play. He will not start, however, as Bill Bryant and Johnny McCarthy have clinched the wing positions pending further notice.

Florida is stronger than it has been at any time this season, a season marred by injuries. Matson Ramsey, regular end, and Moon Mullins, fullback, are back in playing condition and will appear in the starting line-up. Both have been out two weeks. It will mark their initial apearance in uniform since early in the campaign.

Thunderbird Wins Feature From Olsen

Pins Villain as Stooge Beats Tom-Tom; Vincent Lopez Is Winner.

A tantalizing crowd of two Indians proved too, too disgusting for Cliff "Swede" Olsen, featured villain on Joe Turner's weekly rassle show last night, and after 26 minutes of distraction, he finally gave in and was pinned by Chief Thunderbird, his legitimate opponent, as the monotonous, erie sound of the tomtom filled the arena.

Although he seemed to be having the better of it, Olsen was forced on several occasions to feint his attack in the direction of Thunderbird's stooge, Swift Eagle, who circled the ring on the outside, and pedantically beat his tomtom to furnish Thunderbird inspiration. This ultimately resulted in his downfall and this is how it happened—

For 25 minutes Thunderbird failed to find inspiration in the weird sound of the ancient drum, but just when things looked blackest from his embarrassing position on the edge of the ring, the ropes drawn tightly about his thick neck in the hangman's noose grip, he heeded Swift Eagle's chant and returned from sudden death to throw Olsen, who by this time was foaming at the mouth.

Where Thunderbird's tactics of slugging and hitting netted him victory, the same behavior resulted in the loss of the semifinal event for Karl Davis, the Memphis Mauler, who was disqualified in his bout with Vincent Lopez (not the orchestra leader) after 14 minutes. He was accused of gouging and unnecessary roughness. There being no room to penalize him the customary 15 yards for the latter offense, the match had to be awarded to Lopez.

In the preliminaries, Hans Steinke, German strong man, threw Ivan Grandovich, Volga boatman, in 15 minutes with an Australian boomerang; Bill Sledge, former footballer, threw Casey Berger, Scranton coal miner, in 14 minutes with a body slam, and Mays McLain, former all-American gridiron star at Iowa, won from Andy Meixner, in 10 minutes with a series of flying tackles.

Sandstone Takes Empire City Race

Empire City Racktrack, N. Y., Oct. 28 (AP).—Sandstone, 4-year-sprinters in the Fishkill Handicap Frank Hastings, kept her score for the meeting clean by making it two in a row over a field of class "D" sprinters in the Fishkill handicap here today. At home in the mud and slop, the 6 to 5 favorite came from behind and registered by three lengths, running the short six furlongs in 1:10 4-5.

Central vs. Western Heads School Card

Inter-High Game Tops Week-End Clashes for School Boy Gridmen; Gonzaga Prep Faces Strong Washington-Lee.

By Jack Munhall.

A crucial interhigh battle and numerous attractive intersectional clashes feature the scholastic football card this week-end.

Central, fighting desperately to remain in the interhigh race, receives dangerous Western in the Central Stadium at 3:30 this afternoon in the leading local game. Meanwhile, three other local elevens are scheduled to tackle tough Maryland and Virginia rivals.

Gonzaga, beaten only by Eastern and holding victories over Central, Tech and Loyola, journeys to Ballston, Va., to meet powerful Washington-Lee. St. John's, another strong prep team, goes to Baltimore to engage Calvert Hall, and Anacostia High's surprising outfit remains at home to repel the advance of Charlotte Hall in the Eastern Stadium at 3:30 o'clock. Georgetown Prep entertains Landon at Garrett Park.

Tomorrow three more local aggregations venture away from the city. Devitt Prep makes another forage into Virginia to meet Massanuttn Military Academy in Masanutten Military Academy in Massanutten, Va., to face Fork Union Military Academy and St. Alban's School opposes Farm Church School in Baltimore.

Central's last chance to assume a commanding position in interhigh competition is offered by the Western game. The Mount Pleasanters have split even in two contests, defeating Roosevelt and losing to Eastern, and must beat Western to retain an outside hope for the title. Eastern and Tech, the leaders, have won two and three games, respectively, without a setback and should Central drop another game, will be left in a two-team fight for the championship.

Central is counting on Bill Ickes, who ran wild in his first ball-carrying role against Roosevelt last week, to lead the way to victory. Young Ickes, who had spent two years blocking, was at long last given an opportunity to run the ball against Roosevelt and he exhibited promising talent.

Western will again look to its star quarterback, Morris Snead, and halfback, Don Nickalson, to head the offensive commotion it hopes to stir up.

Gonzaga and St. John's, traditional rivals themselves, run up against bruising opponests. Washington and Lee, which defeated Central, 26-6 but was tied by St. John's, 6-6, will unloose a pair of sensational backs against the Purple Invaders. This pair, Tommy Simpson and hulking Forest Tucker, should give the Gonzaga line a busy afternoon.

St. John's, smarting under a stunning 7-6 licking administered last Friday by Western, has drilled faithfully for Calvert and expects a victory. Lee Rinaldi, battering fullback, who tore the Western line to bits in the latter part of the game, will get his chance early today and St. John's may uncover in this stocky lad a real dangerous runner. This is one thing the Cadets have lacked.

Probable lineups:

Central.	Position.	Western.
Fox	L.E.	O'Hanlon
Mirman	L.T.	Veichman

John Remon Voted Official

By the Associated Press.

New York, Oct. 28.—The American Power Boat Association, holding its annual meeting, elected John A. Remon, of Washington, as president today, and received, from Horace Dodge, of Detroit, the first American challenge for next year's Gold Cup racing classic.

Remon succeeds George W. Sutton, jr., of New York, as the association head. Other officers elected were C. King Brugman, of Los Angeles, vice president; Douglas C. Fonda, Orange, N. J., secretary, and Stanley W. Ferguson, Boston, treasurer.

Dodge announced his challenge for the power boat trophy at the meeting. He is the first United States owner to announce an entry for next year's race. Previously, the Gold Cup committee had been advised that Count Theo Rossi, of Italy, plans to compete.

5.6 yards every time he toted the ball last season and he's close to that figure this year. Against T. C. U. this year he rang the first kickoff back 58 yards and he took the second kickoff 62 yards to the T. C. U. 30-yard line withiut stopping to ask directions.

* * *

That young man White will be the chief object of G. W.'s attentions this evening but there's another fellow whom they had best not overlook. His name is Thomas Thompson, and with the Southwest's flair for nicknames, they're naturally dubbing him "Tossin' Tommy," an allieration inspired no doubt by the fame of Slingin' Sammy Baugh.

* * *

Well, down in Tulsa they say that "Tossin' Tommy" can do everything with a football that Slingin' Sammy did, and do many things a heluva lot better, including running with the ball. He's pitched 56 passes this year and 24 of 'em have connected. Against T. C. U. he completed two 40-yard passes but officials detected off side play. Two of his successful heaves against Oklahoma were also called back.

Don't fail me, Tulsa!

Larry Kelley

also may be intentional or not, but it is quite possible for a smart team to use this play with no great gamble.

Suppose a team has the ball on its opponent's three-yard line, fourth down, goal to go. A linebuck is called, the play is apparently stopped.

Bona fide?

Perhaps, but just as possibly a smart play—nothing for the offensive team to lose, and yet difficult for the officials to rule on.

Crowley Has Solution.

Jimmy Crowley, of "Four Horsemen" fame, has brought this up recently, with the suggestion that such a fumble, if recovered by the attacking team, should be returned to the point at which it was fumbled, a very logical solution.

Again last Saturday, Clint Frank, Yale captain, threw a pass over the end zone on fourth down with not a single receiver down the field. Result—Cornell's ball on a touchback. A rainy day—a chance for a blocked kick. Cornell, instead of being deep in its own territory, at midfield or even with a touchdown by running the kick up the field after recovering it.

The rules provide for this, calling it "intentional grounding," but it may just as well have been a misunderstood signal.

And so it runs. Each season brings out its disputed plays and decisions, and will continue to do so until fool-proof rules are made.

Turning now to the outstanding football games of this Saturday, we pick as headliner in the East the meeting of two of the small number of undefeated and untied teams, Yale and Dartmouth.

A Personal Duel?

According to previous performances, and as the newspapers like to play it up, it may resolve itself into a personal duel between Clint Frank, of Yale, a certain All-American for the second time, and a sophomore back, Hutchinson, of Dartmouth.

But there are many more factors to be considered.

Dartmouth met its first major opponent of the year in Harvard last Saturday, and, though outplayed, won by the convincing margin of 20-2 on a muddy and rain-soaked field, through the individual brilliance of Sophomore Bill Hutchinson.

Can the Dartmouth line (which has been its strongest point since the advent of Earl Blaik as maestro) shake Hutchinson loose against a vastly improving Yale line—one which has been put through stern tests by Penn, Army and Cornell, even though always outweighed?

Clint Frank, on the other hand, proved himself a consistently brilliant player throughout last season and so far this year. The Yale offense is one of the finest and trickiest in the East, if not in the entire country, thanks to Coach Greasy Neale, an old campaigner and a real fox.

Can the relatively inexperienced Dartmouth line meet this attack?

Kelley Picks Yale.

Each team has several backs capable of taking advantage of a split-second lapse in the other's defense. I don't intend to try to pick winners like other sports writers, but, being an "Old Blue," I'd just like to go on record as hoping for a Yale victory.

Out in Pittsburgh tomorrow an in-and-out Carnegie Tech outfit runs up against one of the strongest teams of the country. The recent and very startling announcement by the powers-that-be from that stronghold to the effect that they "contemplate" a return to the amateur ranks carries no weight in this contest.

Although Pitt lacks a potent passing attack, their powerful ground attack, which bogged down for the third consecutive year against Fordham, and then regained its momentum against Wisconsin, figures to run the Tartans into the ground. Possessed of a wealth of backs and a line to match, Pitt looks invulnerable.

And now its off to watch that big game tomorrow, still hoping, like every other "Yalie," for a renewal of that bowl jin" which kept better Dartmouth teams at bay for more than 50 years.

Cardinals May Take Baugh South

St. Louis, Oct. 28 (AP).—General Manager Branch Rickey of the St. Louis Cardinals said today the National League Baseball team expected to take Sammy Baugh South to its spring training camp next year.

Baugh, pass-slinger extraordinary, was reported under the impression he had invalidated his Cardinal contract by playing football with the Washington Redskins. He was a third-baseman and shortstop at Texas Christian University.

Night Clubs to Continue Halloween Activities an Extra Day.

By Chanticleer

Something new in Halloween celebration is scheduled by many night clubs this season in the information received here from the tom-tom beaters. Not only will the night spots in and around Washington designate tomorrow night for ghost and goblin festivities but have added Monday night as a continuation of the celebration.

From the Shoreham Hotel comes word that two orchestras will supply the dance music. In the Blue Room, Barnee and the Shoreham Orchestra will hold forth, while in the cocktail room, Al Kamons and his boys will transform the Louis Seize Room into a hot-cha swing party for the gay younger set.

A number of special entertainment acts have been imported for tomorrow night's Halloween party at the Shoreham, and there will be favors and noisemakers.

• • • •

Music to suit the individual personality is played by Sonny Kendis at the Pall Mall Room at the Raleigh Hotel. Sonny is becoming as popular to Washington night-owls as he was at the New York Stork Club. So far, Sonny has been able to play any request requested as requested. There's music during lunch, cocktail, dinner and supper.

• • • •

A brand new revue is on the bill at the Lotus this week. Headliners are Alfred Latell (Bonzo), the La Fons, top-notch adagio team, and Dancer Al Brower. The Lenora Debutantes are being held over. Al Norton is the master of ceremonies, Marian Dawn does the vocals and Bill Strickland's Capitolians supply the music.

• • • •

The Metronome Room at the Wardman Park Hotel continues to remain the lively spot with Paul Kain and his orchestra supplying the fine music. The lads are on duty every night from 10 till 2 and a dandy Halloween party has been arranged.

• • • •

Never a cover, even on Halloween, is the word at the Mayfair, Cafe of All Nations. Jack and Leo and Ray Woods will see to it that everyone on hand for the Witch's Eve will be entertained.

• • • •

Emil Vladimoff provides new skits at the Troika this week. Featured performers are Vera Verega, Mischa Markoff, Dena Larena, Lolik and Orlik and others. The revues are presented at 8:30 and midnight every evening. Dance music is supplied by Sasha Bartnevsky and his orchestra.

• • • •

Good food and dance music is on the fare at the Madrillon. Johnny Shaw and his orchestra provide the tunes from 7:30 till 1:30. Featured on the program are the songs by Helen Forrest.

• • • •

One of Washington's delightfully informal night spots is the Hi Hat louge. No dancing, but there's entertainment every night. Featured are Helen Malcom, Dick Reger and the Three M's. A Halloween program has been arranged for tomorrow night beginning at 9 and the adjoining Ambassador Room will be open, too.

• • • •

Take a ride out to the River Bend on the Mount Vernon boulevard. A rustic building that has the home atmosphere, you'll like it. Specialty is the chicken dinner. Halloween will be celebrated Monday night too. Don't forget.

• • • •

Jimmy Crandall, gracious host at Brinkley's, that popular night spot in Southeast on Eighth street, tells his customers that they'll be celebating Halloween Monday also. Jimmy Bright and his orchestra provide the music.

• • • •

Best o' luck to J. N. May, of Alexandria, who has taken over the reins at the Stone Villa Inn. The new proprietor states that Chinese and American food will be featured. Music will be supplied by popular Al Shea and his New Yorkers.

• • • •

Ever a gay spot is the Mayflower lounge. Whether it be an afternoon chat or an evening dance. Sidney's Orchestra provides music before 7 and after 10. Songs by Claire Willis.

• • • •

The Big Apple will be featured tonight at the Boulevard Farms. Music by Phil Loria and his orchestra. Halloween will be celebrated on Monday, too. A floor show is on the bill every evening of the week.

SEC Restrains LoanCo. Branch In Mt. Rainier

Charges False Statements Made in Registration to Attract Investors.

The Securities and Exchange Commission yesterday issued a stop order preventing further sale of certain securities by the Metropolitan Personal Loan Co., which operates an office at Mount Rainier, Md.

Since July 6, 1936, the loan company is said to have sold, through an underwriter, $256,000 in debentures and $81,125 in class A stock of the securities covered in its registration statement, which became effective as of June 28, 1936, and which was suspended by the commission's order yesterday.

The order charges that the registration statement made by the loan company "includes untrue statements of material facts" and also that it "omits material facts required to be stated."

In an opinion accompanying the order the commission asserts that between January, 1933, and January, 1936, the books of the concern have shown "a flagrant disregard of sound accounting principles, impelled in most instances by a desire to continue a policy of dividend payments which, with an accompanying appearance of strong financial condition, would present its securities to the public as an attractive investment."

Among "material" omissions" charged by the commission were:

Failure to disclose that no reserve had been provided against the 50 per cent loss suffered in the sale of repossessed cars in nine months ended December 31, 1936.

Failure to set up in the balance sheet of March 31, 1936, a liability created by a dividend of approximately $6,000.

Failure to disclose the concern was a defendent in a damage suit for $6,438 brought by a former employe.

Among "misleading" items charged were listing as assets of 200 shares of Seaboard Utilities Corporation stock at $2,075 and 20 shares Railroad Shares corporation at $225, while no market existed for either; statements of income and surplus, and the inclusion of uncollectible or doubtful items among notes and accounts receivable.

The business of the company is described by the commission as lepdign money in amounts of $300 or less at three-and-one-half per cent per month interest on unpaid balances. The concern is also said to have purchased at discount notes held by other small loan companies.

Bethlehem Net Is Trebled In Nine Months

3rd Quarter Profit $2.31 Against 85c a Year Ago; Dividend $1.50.

By the Associated Press.

New York, Oct. 28.—Bethlehem Steel Corporation today reported net income in the September quarter of $9,249,560, equal to $2.31 a share on the common stock, compared with $4,575,058, or 85 cents in the September quarter last year.

Directors declared a dividend of $1.50 on the common stock, same as paid in the previous quarter and compared with $1, in the first quarter of the year.

Net earnings for the nine months were $27,566,267, compared with $8,609,514 in the comparable period of 1936. The nine months' profits were equal to $6.88 a common share, compared with $1.01 in the first nine months of 1936.

Eugene G. Grace, president, reported operations this month averaged around 65 per cent of capacity, but said at present the rate was considerably lower. Operations in the third quarter averaged 85.1 per cent of capacity, compared with 92.9 in the June quarter, and 69.5 in the third quarter last year. Unfilled orders, as of September 30, were $125,820,124, compared with $147,216,591 at the end of June, and $93,272,198 on September 30, 1936. In the June quarter of this year, company reported net income of $10,022,874, or $2.56 a common share. He also pointed out that earnings would have been approximately 30 cents a share higher in the later quarter were it not for a deduction of about $650,000 for undistributed profits taxes and $350,000 as expense incidental to the recent bond issue.

Grace said that the bookings figure meant there was practically no rail buying at the time, and that the automobile program had not asserted itself prominently as yet.

"Therefore," he continued, "with bookings at 45 per cent of capacity against miscellaneous business, I do not think that the situation is as bad as the people whose judgment has been influenced by the security market are apt to think. Things are not all gone to pot by any means."

Leading Smelter Cuts Copper to 11¾ Cents

New York, Oct. 28 (AP).—A leading custom smelter today reduced the price of domestic copper to 11¾ cents a pound, from the 12-cent level prevailing for two days. There was no immediate indication that domestic producers would follow the lead.

Early in September the smelting division of the industry instituted a lower price than producers by lowering the metal from 13 cents to 12 cents and then advanced it to 12½ cents. Early this week it fell back to 12 cents and leading producers met this quotation.

Excess Reserve Up 50 Millions

By the Associated Press.

The Federal Reserve Board said yesterday lendable bank funds increased $50,000,000 during the week ended October 27 to $1,070,000,000. The upturn in these funds, or excess reserves, followed a $50,000,000 increase last week.

The board's weekly condition of Federal Reserve banks showed the climb during the week ended October 27 resulted in part from a $27,000,000 decline in money in circulation to $6,519,000,000. When money in circulation decreases, it means that funds are flowing back into the banks, increasing their supplies of idle money.

The board reported its aggregate holdings of Government securities remained unchanged during the week at $2,526,000,000. The board, however, reduced its holdings of Treasury bills by $750,000, to $629,654,000. Offsetting this, Treasury note holdings increased $750,000, to $1,158,463,000.

Foreign Exchange.

By the Associated Press

British, French and Belgian currencies tended higher in terms of the dollar in foreign exchange dealings yesterday.

The British pound sterling at $4.95⅝ was up ⅜ of a cent, and the French franc at 3.36⅜ cents was up .00⅜ of a cent. The belga rose .01 of a cent at 16.88 cents.

In London, the United States dollar closed ⅛ of a cent lower at 4.95¼ to the pound, against the New York overnight rate of $4.95¼ for sterling. In Paris, the dollar finished at 3.365 cents to the franc, against the New York overnight rate of 3.360 cents.

Steel Prices Unchanged.

Boston Wool Market.

Boston, Oct. 28 (AP).—(U. S. Dept. of Agr.)—Little business was transacted in the wool market today. Quotations continued irregular but were almost entirely nominal because sales volume was insufficient to establish prices.

Wheat Prices Advance With Export Sales

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, Oct. 28.—Aided by new export purchases of around 1,250,000 bushels of North American wheat and by upturns of securities, wheat here closed with net gains today.

Advances of Chicago wheat values at the last more than overcame setbacks which at times amounted to 1¼ cents a bushel. These setbacks were associated with enlarged selling pressure from the East that developed on wheat price rallies, and that repeatedly forced the market down.

At the close, Chicago wheat futures were ⅛ to ⅝ above yesterday's finish, December, 96⅝ to 96½; May, 96 to 96¼; July, 91¼ to 91⅜; corn, ⅛ off to 1 cent up, December, 58⅞ to 59; May, 59⅞ to 60; July, 60½; oats unchanged to ⅛ advance, December, 30, and rye showing ½ to 1⅜ bulge; December, 74⅝. The outcome for provisions was unchanged to 10 cents higher.

Stocks Respond to Lower Buying Margins With General Gains in Active Trading.

New York, Oct. 28.—The demonstration of the United States Government, acting through the Federal Reserve Board, toward encouragement of speculation and in support of the stock market was accepted as an earnest of good intentions and prices moved ahead along the stock and commodity line. United States bonds were indifferent, although that division also has the promise of aid through purchase next month by the Federal Reserve Board. Stocks enjoyed a sales volume of around 2,500,000 shares, the largest in a week, and were able to show gains of 1 to 3 points at the close. December wheat finished half a cent higher at 96⅜ cents a bushel in the Chicago market. Cotton was dull.

The first impact on stocks of the lowering of margins on long stock from 55 per cent to 40 per cent and the fixing of a margin of 50 per cent on short sales was a vigorous rally. Prices opened 1 to 5 points higher on large sales. That reaction of the market to the news was a conventional one, largely because the news coming at this time was somewhat of a surprise. Wall Street has talked all summer of lower margins and from time to time has spread rumors that the Federal Reserve Board was about to act. In the past week or so hope had died down and some credence was placed in the assurances from Washington that neither the President nor the Federal Reserve Board was interested. As for the SEC, it has opposed doing anything calculated to ease pressure on the markets.

Yielding to Pressure.

Had the Federal Reserve Board originally set 40 per cent as a proper margin for stock purchases, no one would have been excited. That figure may be a better one than 55 per cent. What is significant and perhaps a bit disturbing is that a change has been made after a sharp break in prices. The case for lower margins has been well stated by President Gay, of the Stock Exchange; by Chairman Aldrich, of the Chase National Bank, and by many a Wall Street man. Proponents of high margins have been largely Government officials. Most commentators on the subject have, nevertheless, maintained that margin action was near the bottom of the list of reforms that might be undertaken to improve markets and restore business confidence.

Immediate Effect.

Perhaps the other reforms will follow, as for instance abolishment of—or reduction in—capital gains taxes, reduction in undistributed profits tax, easing of the law on insider dealings, balancing of the budget, and the like. Immediately the lower margins may thaw out some frozen stock market accounts and increase the purchasing power of funds now unemployed, and also the high margin on short selling may cause some covering of accounts and discourage a bit of fresh bear operations.

Attacking Symptoms.

On longer run it won't help much merely to improve the mechanics of trading. People buy or sell when they are convinced that the price trend will be down or up, and not because of minor changes in interest rates or margin requirements. If money could be borrowed for nothing and if no margin at all were required, people still would not buy stocks if they felt prices were going a good deal lower, for the loans would have to be repaid.

Making it Easier.

The jump to the conclusion that the setting of a 50 per cent margin requirement on short selling would stifle the bears is an easy one to take, but it would seem to land the jumper on a soft spot. Much depends upon what the stock exchange may do. At present the minimum margin requirement on short selling is 10 points, regardless of price. That acts as a 1,000 per cent margin on $1 stocks—a prohibitive figure—and 50 per cent on a $20 stock. The Federal Reserve Board ruling actually reduces the short selling margin on all stocks selling at less than $20 a share, and the reduction on stocks selling in the low-down class is enormous. Even on high-priced stocks the board has not lifted margins enough to count. Most stock exchange firms have charged from 30 to 60 per cent margin on short sales in the higher brackets. Still the board has followed the usual tactics of the politician and done what was calculated to please the public and to satisfy the President, who is said to think that short sellers were to blame for all the stock market and business troubles.

Odd Lot Taxes.

Mention was made in this column yesterday of the charging by odd lot brokers of the transfer tax on purchases to their clients. One stock exchange firm, which deals for brokers, has had the practice for many years of paying the transfer tax on purchase orders for odd lots on an assortment of about 15 stocks, including Steel, Chrysler, United and Hudson.

Death Taxes Feature Local Revenue Act

By Thomas M. Cahill.

New inheritance and estate taxes were reviewed last night by Jo V. Morgan, special assistant corporation counsel, in charge of taxation, District Government, in an address before the Fiduciary Section of the District of Columbia Bankers Association, at the Mayflower Hotel.

Speaking at the meeting, at which Irving Zirpel, section chairman, presided, Mr. Morgan said, in part, that in Title V of the District of Columbia revenue act of 1937, there is provided an entirely new class of taxes, namely, inheritance and estate taxes, generally called "death taxes." Title V is in two articles, Article I imposing the inheritance tax, and Article II, the estate tax.

The death tax imposed by Title V, Mr. Morgan explained, is an excise tax, as distinguished from a direct tax upon property. In other words, it is a tax upon the privilege of inheriting or otherwise receiving property, a tax upon the transfer of the property and not upon the property itself.

This distinction is sometimes important. For instance, the direct tax upon intangible personal property cannot be levied by the District upon Federal, State and municipal bonds, while the tax imposed by Title V is levied upon the transfer at death of such intangible personal property.

Article I, he reminded, lays the burden of the tax upon the recipient of the property, while Article II, places it, in the first instance, upon the estate of the decedent. Inheritance taxes are levied upon two main classes of transfers, he said, first, that of property owned by a decedent at time of death which takes place at that time, either by will or law, and second, transfers that occur during the life of the decedent, made either to take effect after his death, or in contemplation of it.

Two Classes of Property.

Property covered by the inheritance tax law is, for the purpose of administration, divided into two classes, that which goes to the heir, or next of kin, through an executor or administrator, and that which goes to the recipient without the control of a personal representative. In the latter are transfers of property such as real estate by will or inheritance, joint accounts, joint tenancies, property transferred during the life of a decedent to take effect after, or in contemplation of death.

Transfer of this latter class, if in excess of the aggregate of $1,000, must be reported by the recipient to the assessor within 60 days of the death of the decedent, and the recipient must pay a tax on such transfer within six months of the death. The personal representative of every decedent whose estate is in excess of $1,000, must, within 15 months after the death, file an itemized report or schedule of all the property of the decedent, its market value, names of beneficiaries and their relationship to the decedent, and any other information that the assessor may require.

"The personal representative must pay the tax due by all recipients and beneficiaries and deduct it from their respective interests in the estate.

He is directed to sell the respective shares when necessary to pay the tax. The bond of the personal representative is liable for the tax, and penalties assessed, but in no case shall the bond be liable for a greater sum than is actually received by him.

Only transfers of property which has a taxable situs in the District are affected by Article I, and it becomes necessary to determine, in some cases, where the decedent was domiciled at the time of his death, for the reason that the taxable situs of intangible personal property is the domicile of the owner regardless of where the pt sical evidence, such as certificates, notes and the like might be.

Estate Tax.

Discussing Article II, which imposes the estate tax, Mr. Morgan said, in reality, it is not an additional burden upon residents of the District for the reason that the tax payable is 80 per cent of the estate tax which the decedent would otherwise pay to the Federal Government under the United States revenue act of 1926. In other words, when the decedent's estate has paid to the District the 80 per cent, the estate will receive credit for that sum on the amount due the Federal Government.

Moreover, the estate will be allowed to credit upon the 80 per cent due the District, any death taxes paid to any State or Territory. For example, if the amount due the Federal Government as estate tax is $1,000, the District of Columbia would be entitled to receive $800, unless the decedent's estate had paid to the State of Maryland $300 in death taxes, in which event the estate would be required to pay to the District of Columbia $500 only.

The speaker reminded that all executors and administrators, or if none is appointed, persons in possession of property passing from a decedent, are required to file with the assessor a copy of the estate tax return in cases where such is required to be filed with the Federal Government, and, in addition, all communications affecting such matter received by the personal representative, or person in possession, from the Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

Regulations, for administrative purposes, require copies of communications from other officials, such as the collector of taxes and the board of tax appeals, to be filed with the assessor. Upon receipt of the copy of the return, the latter will assess the tax, and transmit a statement to the taxpayer. This tax must be paid within 30 days after its determination by the assessor.

Cotton Steady; December 8.13

New York, Oct. 28 (AP).—Cotton moved irregularly in quiet trading today. March contracts, which had reacted from 8.14 to 8.06, and then experienced mid-afternoon recoveries, sold off to close at 8.07, with final prices 2 points net higher to 2 lower.

Opening advances of 5 to 9 points were followed by gains of a few additional points on local, commission house and a little foreign buying attracted by early firmness in the stock market and favorable reaction to the reduced securities margin requirements.

Big Radium Deposit Found in Argentina

Buenos Aires, Oct. 27.—Large deposits of radium and uranium have been discovered in the Province of Cordoba, in Argentina, which may prove the richest so far found in the world. Dr. Luciano Catalano, provincial director of mines, expressed high optimism over the possibilities of exploitation following a visit of inspection to the mines located in the district of Calamuchita.

Dr. Catalano envisaged the possibility of manufacturing helium gas and luminous paints containing radioactive salts. Mineral spas are to be created if it is found that waters in the zone have radioactive properties. The valuable mineral discoveries are within a district reserved for government exploitation.

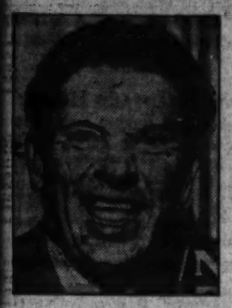
Bob Burns Says—



I know some picture people who are squawkin' about havin' to pay income tax and I remember several years ago, when they didn't have'ta pay any, they weren't worried about the situation at all.

It's a lot like my uncle who got a dollar too much in his pay envelope one month and he didn't say anything about it, but the next month, when he was a dollar short, he went to the cashier and squawked his head off. The cashier says, "Well, last month, we put a dollar too much in your envelope and you didn't say anything," and my uncle says, "Well, when you only made one mistake I didn't think nothin' of it, but when I saw you'd made two, I thought I'd better speak to you about it!"

Flat 40-Hr. Bill With Fixed Pay Urged by Berry

the No. 2 item of business on the President's special session agenda, but it was still deadlocked in the House Rules Committee. The Berry proposal, if taken up by Congressional labor forces, may further complicate this impasse.

Chairman John J. O'Connor of the House Labor Committee had written every member of his group in an effort to break the present jam. Although he has consistently forecast the bill will reach the House floor and pass this session, growing labor and business criticism have not greatly improved its chances. Chairman Mary Norton of the House Labor Committee was prepared to force it to the House via the tedious petition route, but that conceivably might take until December.

Although the bill has passed the Senate, Berry plans to introduce his substitute again in that chamber, and place it in the hands of a House member for introduction on the other side of the Capitol.

New Battles Forecast.

New differences were virtually certain to arise over the Berry measure, promising a confusion of wage issues and pitched fighting at the special session. Extreme laborites will contend the Berry standards are not high enough, while business spokesmen are expected to contend they will be too high in some sections for industry to meet. The Justice Department enforcement set-up may be another target for criticism.

The Tennessean explained his proposal before leaving last night for Nashville. He said he has been working on the bill for months, discussed it with both labor and business leaders in the South and in the North, and "up to this moment I have yet to find a single man who opposes it." Berry said he talked over the plan with A. F. of L. and C. I. O. leaders at their peace conferences here.

He declined to disclose the President's position, although he has talked to him several times since Congress adjourned.

Berry said the flat 40-hour-week requirement was still tentative, and might be lowered slightly. He favors 30 cents an hour in the statute, instead of 35, to meet geographic differences in wage standards.

No New Cost to U. S.

The important thing, he said, is to "keep business in business" as well as improving labor standards. He believes the pending Black-Connery bill will not only create a mass of conflicts and violations but tend to drive business out of business.

Berry, former head of Labor's Nonpartisan League, a pro-Roosevelt labor campaign instrument, said his substitute would impose no new administrative cost on the Government, as no new board would be set up, and the existing facilities of the Justice Department can be used for enforcement.

No penalties will be provided. But every violater of the provision of the proposed law would be subject to Federal prosecution, as under the anti-trust laws, upon submission of evidence of violations. He would fix the penalty at $100 fine for each violation imposed on each employe.

"No one can object to a minimum wage of 30 cents an hour, or a 40-hour week, but if they do and violate the law, the Justice Department would take the necessary steps to stop the violations," Berry said.

Would End Exploitation.

He conceded that establishment of too high a minimum wage would deter collective bargaining by organized labor and tend to establish a maximum rather than a minimum wage. He said he found this complaint, among others, with the pending Black-Connery measure.

"My only reason for supporting a minimum wage by law is to give concern to the under-privileged and to lay some floor to end cuthroat competition through the exploitation of the workingman," said Berry.

"I believe the 30-cent minimum wage will automatically eliminate the theory of a differential between the North and the South. The low minimum also leaves the opportunity for the pursuit of initiative and unusual service. It will not disturb the principle of collective bargaining, as would be the case of a high minimum, which would be regarded as a maximum wage."

He said it was his purpose "to make employment opportunities," declaring that was "the only hope of eliminating unemployment." He said he had used a 40-hour week in his bill only tentatively, because "no one can definitely identify a proper and adequate work week to relieve unemployment immediately. The exact number of hours must be determined through trials and tests."

Berry declared that although he supported the Black-Connery bill as a member of the Senate committee which considered it, he "never thought it would prove workable."

Surety Firm Denies Bus Crash Liability

Baltimore, Oct. 28 (AP).—The Car and General Insurance Corporation, Ltd., London, asked the United States District Court today to halt institution of suits for damages in a Rockville, Md., school bus wreck.

Fourteen of 28 children on the bus were killed when the bus was struck by a train in April, 1935.

The company asserted the bus at the time was not being used in regular school routine, and that the children had paid $1 each to their teacher to finance a special trip.

Federal Judge William C. Coleman directed that an answer be filed to the company's contentions by November 16.

Alleged Victim of Mrs. Hahn in Court

George Heis, shown in court at Cincinnati in a wheel chair, was summoned by the prosecution as a witness in the trial of Mrs. Anna Hahn for the poison death of Jacob Wagner, elderly German. Prosecutor Dudley Outcalt called Heis "Mrs. Hahn's only living victim," asserting Heis was crippled by poison after drinking beer with Mrs. Hahn.

Sea Democracy Of U. S. Wants Lettuce Hearts

Weird Tales of Seamen's Demands Very Funny to Foreign Shippers.

On a passenger liner coming up from South America, the purser was in the habit of inviting favored passengers into his cabin for cocktails. One evening as he was making music with the cocktail shaker while his thirsty guests looked on, the door flew open and an angry individual burst in. He was the delegate for the steward's branch of the union.

"Look here," he told the purser, "I've been watching you. If you're going to serve drinks in your cabin, you've gotta hire a union bartender. And if you don't like it, I'll call a strike and tie up the ship."

From Baltimore comes a new story about the much publicized freighter Algic. One day a member of the crew stormed into the galley and spoke to the cook in this vein:

"I like lettuce, see. But I am getting tired of just lettuce leaves. Hereafter I want hearts of lettuce, like the officers."

"You fellows get the same chow as the officers," the cook replied. "Any way, this lettuce hasn't got any hearts. It's all leaves."

But that didn't satisfy the irate lover of lettuce. A night or so later he broke into the galley and scattered lettuce all over the place.

Then there is the one about the crew of a Government-owned ship that put into Cristobal, Panama. The ship had been docking on a certain side of the pier for many years, and arrangements had been made for handling the cargo on that side. But it didn't dock there this time. The crew threatened to stage a sit-down strike unless the ship were berthed on "the cool side of the dock." They had their way too, even though it meant a longer transfer of the cargo.

The swimming pools of American passenger liners figure in a number of stories. There is one about the drunken steward who plunged in, clothes and all, causing some of the girls to scatter. There is another about a whole "black gang," the fellows who work in the engine room, taking over the pool for a bit of sport.

These stories, and the one about the steward who knocked at the cabin door of a prim young woman and said, "Get up, baby; it's time for breakfast," are causing vast amusement among owners of foreign ships. Somehow, though, the American ship operators don't think they're so funny.

Stokowski Denies Talk of Romance With Garbo

Philadelphia, Oct. 28 (AP).—Leopold Stokowski, orchestra conductor, denied today reports of a romance between him and Greta Garbo, film acress. Taking public cognizance of the reports from the West Coast, he declared "there is absolutely no truth in these stories."

"Miss Garbo has a group of friends," he said, "and I am one of this group, but there is positively no question of marriage."

Craig Gives Up Mustache After Poetry Attack

Woodring, in Villain's Role, Routs Hirsute Adornment.

went through his mind as he saw his patiently nurtured oral bush go floating down the drain. But the next day, his eyes underlined with strain, his jaw clenched tight, he strode into the department with a naked face.

He plunged into his work, determined to forget. But he found he could not forget. He had loved his mustache, and now it was gone. The poem follows:

"My Lord above," the Colonel cried,
As he saw the General's lip.
Lost was the shaven outline
It bore before his trip.
Nestling below the sturdy nose,
Concealing the mouth so firm,
Reared a bristly looking brush,
A net for the wandering germ.
"If, my General, you must be rash, Grow whiskers along with that mustache."

So the tragic drama moves on to the next issue of the Army and Navy Journal. Another poem appeared. This one, also an acrostic, spelling out the name "H. H. Woodring," was titled "Riposte," and signed "M. C." It said, bitterly:

Ho, ho! I roared, when I saw
How envy festered on your heart,
What jealous twinges caused you pain,
Oh, how they pierced like arrow darts!
Odd, that on your lip you cannot grow
Downy hair, like that in solitude,
Roughing on trip, I grew—
I bloomed to pulchritude.
Naught would I do to cause our clash,
Gone, therefore, is my fine mustache.

Military men are traditionally stern, reluctant to reveal their inner workings. Possibly the entire incident is closed. But all students of the drama are waiting with bated breath for the next issue of the Army and Navy Journal (advt.) in the hope that there may yet be a further chapter in the thrilling, though sad, story that has already been dubbed the Incident of the Unfortunate Lip-Wool.

Crisfield Lacks Water In Spite of Floods

Crisfield, Md., Oct. 28 (AP).—While western Maryland was threatened with floods, this little Eastern Shore town had a water shortage today.

For three days the city's water supply has been cut off because of a leak in the main line from two artesian wells.

Schools have been closed and activities of seafood houses—the principal industry—curtailed until service is resumed.

Navy Men Invent New-Type Mask For High Altitude

Secretary Swanson said yesterday that an oxygen mask developed by two naval officers "seems to offer definite promise" of conquering aviation's greatest problem of altitude.

The comment was made in letters of commendation to Lieut. Aurelius B. Vosseler, attached to the Bureau of Aeronautics here, and Lieut. John H. Korbe, of the Medical Corps, who is on duty aboard the aircraft carrier Ranger.

"As the ceiling at which service aircraft can be operated becomes greater, the well-known deficiencies of present methods of supplying oxygen become more serious," Swanson wrote.

"The report on this particular development indicates that the work conducted by you will lead to further definite improvements in the oxygen equipment and, although only a beginning, its importance cannot be overemphasized. It is the first development which seems to offer definite promise and seems to point the way to a satisfactory solution.

60 Rich Families Rule U. S., Wall Street Author Asserts

By the Associated Press.

New York, Oct. 28.—In a 500-page book entitled "America's 60 Families," published tomorrow, Ferdinand Lundberg, former Wall Street financial writer, asserts that "The United States is owned and dominated today by a hierarchy of its 60 richest families, buttressed by no more than 90 families of less wealth."

"These families," Lundberg continues, "are the living center of the modern industrial oligarchy which dominates the United States, functioning discreetly under a de jure democratic form of government behind which a de facto government, absolutist and plutocratic in its lineaments, has gradually taken form since the Civil War.

"This de facto government is actually the Government of the United States—informal, invisible, shadowy. It is the government of money in a dollar democracy."

Among the leading families in Lundberg's list, in order, are: Rockefeller, Morgan, Ford, Harkness, Mellon, Vanderbilt, Whitney, duPont, McCormick, Baker, Fisher and Guggenheim.

"Outside this plutocratic circle (of 60 and 90 families)," he writes, "there are perhaps 350 other families, less defined in development and wealth, but accounting for most of the incomes of $100,000 or more that do not accrue to members of the inner circle."

Lundberg wrote "Imperial Hearst," a biography of William Randolph Hearst, last year.

The first 10 families in his table of 60, ranked in general on the basis of their 1924 income tax, with the number of family members filing returns, their "primary source of wealth" and "net aggregate fortune taxed," are:

Rockefeller (21), Standard Oil, $359,100,000.

Ford (2), Ford Motor Co., $220,000,000.

Harkness (5), Standard Oil, $150,200,000.

Mellon (3), Aluminum Co., $150,000,000.

Standard Oil group (28), including Archbold, Rogers, Bedford, Cutler, Flagler, Pratt and Benjamin, Standard Oil, $118,700,000.

DuPont (20), E. I. duPont de Nemours, $79,500,000.

Other families listed are: Field (Marshal Field), Curtis-Bok (Curtis Publishing Co.), Duke (American Tobacco Co.), Berwind (coal), Lehman (Lehman Brothers), Widener (tobacco and utilities), Reynolds (tobacco), and Astor (real estate).

Bandits Invade Home.

Two colored holdup men yesterday robbed Elbe C. Bettis, colored, 1223 Hamlin street northeast, of a watch, old coins and revolver, valued at $20, he reported to police. He said the pair, one of them armed, made their escape in a waiting car after tying him in his home.
